Co-ed's Uncle Seized In Slaying at Asheville After Attending Rites

Prof. Clevenger Held in Hotel Death; Sheriff Refuses Comment.

Wollner Released After New Arrest

Prisoner Taken 4 Hours Before the Deadline Set by Official.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Asheville, N. C., July 24.—Prof. W. L. Clevenger, 54-year-old specialist in dairying and animal husbandry on the faculty of North Carolina State College at Raleigh, was taken into custody here late today and held "for investigation" in the assault-murder of his blonde, young niece, Helen Clevenger, nine days ago.

The stocky, partly bald bachelor uncle of the slain New York University honor student, whose mutilated body was found in her room at the fashionable Battery Park Hotel, was locked up at 3 p. m. The surprise arrest came four hours before a deadline set by Sheriff Laurence E Brown to "break" the case.

In his role as chief investigator of the most baffling, gruesome crime this mountain city ever has known, the sheriff had told newspapermen two days ago he would arrest the man he suspected of the murder by 7 p. m. today.

Attended Funeral.

Tired and red-eyed from lack of sleep, Brown called newspapermen to his office at 7:05 p. m. He then announced the professor had been seized upon his return here from attending the funeral of his 18-year-old niece at Fletcher, Ohio.

"I'd hoped to have a confession for you boys at 7 o'clock," he said, "but I am unable to give it to you.

"I may not have it for a week or ten days yet."

When he was reminded of his statement that he would arrest the man he suspected of being the ravisher-killer by 7 p. m., the sheriff became abrupt.

"I'm not going to tell you any more."

He was asked:

"When you detain a man for investigation, and hold him in jail, do you consider the man under arrest?"

"I won't say," he replied.

Clevenger was locked in a cell in Buncombe County Jail, high above the city, on the fifteenth floor of the skyscraper courthouse here.

From a barred window he could see far into the Big Smoky Mountains, to which he brought his niece on a holiday that ended in her mysterious death.

The professor returned to Asheville because he wanted to do everything he could to co-operate with the investigation, said C. W. Pegram, prominent dairyman here, at whose home Clevenger and his niece had dinner the evening before she was murdered.

"The officers are barking up the wrong tree this time," remarked Pegram.

"I feel Prof. Clevenger didn't have anything to do with this crime."

Arrest Is Surprise.

From Raleigh, capital of the State and seat of State College, where Clevenger had been on the faculty for 13 years, came expressions of surprise.

"He is highly regarded as a talented teacher by those that know him," one of his superiors said.

Other members of the faculty, however, described him as "standoffish" and aloof.

"I feel," asserted one, "like I hardly know him. You never, for instance, found him mixing socially at all."

The professor teaches animal husbandry and dairying half of the time, and works with the Agricultural Extension Service the other half.

Unmarried, he lives in a dormitory on the college campus.

"He didn't get around much socially, but now and again you'd see

3 Bootleggers Raise $60,000 Bond Quickly

Trio Held in Wounding of O'Brien Linked to Warring's Group.

Police yesterday charged three men who they termed "small-time" bootleggers with assault with intent to kill Joseph Edward O'Brien, who was shot Tuesday morning as he was standing in front of a restaurant at Second street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

In less than half an hour after the charge was placed against them the "small timers" had raised a $60,000 bond, $20,000 each, and were at liberty. The bond was arranged by Emmett (Rags) Warring, leader of the "Warring gang," which is said to be trying to "take over" illicit numbers and liquor rackets throughout the Nation's Capital, Chief of Detectives Bernard W. Thompson said.

Before Warring obtained the release of the men, Thompson had described the trio as petty bootleggers and stated that they may have been tied up with the Warring gang.

Inspector Thompson's story of the shooting reads like an account of repeal rackets of the Capone era in Chicago. He described it as an outbreak of gang warfare.

The three charged with assault to kill O'Brien are Samuel S. Montgomery, 39, of a downtown hotel; George F. Tear, 23, brother of Richard Tear, fiance of the murdered Corinna Loring, and Joseph S. Bond, 28, of the 1200 block of Thirty-fourth street northwest.

Inspector Thompson said the shooting was the outgrowth of Montgomery's attempts, as a lieutenant of "Rags" Warring, to "muscle" into the liquor selling

Reserve Banks Pare Expenses To Save Funds

Salaries, Operating Costs Cut to Meet Dividends Falling Due.

By the Associated Press.

An economy survey intended to help the 12 Federal Reserve Banks pay normal dividends without dipping into their surplus funds has been ordered by the Reserve Board.

It was begun, officials disclosed yesterday, when figures for the first half of 1936 showed earnings sufficient to cover expenditures, but leaving an insufficient margin for the usual 6 per cent declaration.

This situation was declared to have resulted from the steady decline, over a period of several years, in the interest rate paid on Government securities. The banks hold $2,430,000,000 of these securities and the income from them constitutes 96 per cent of their earnings.

As part of the economy drive, the position of chairman of the board of the individual banks has been made an honorary instead of a salaried position, at an annual saving of $240,000.

In addition, the salaries of the bank presidents at Philadelphia, Richmond, Minneapolis and San Francisco have been cut an undisclosed extent.

Joseph P. Roderick a member of the Reserve Board, moreover, is visiting each bank in turn, inspecting its methods and higher-bracket pay rolls looking for additional possibilities for savings.

The dividends of the Reserve banks are paid, as with any bank, to their stockholders. The stockholders of the Reserve Banks are the commercial banks which hold

Rain Relieves Part of West; U. S. Aid Sped

Corn Belt, Neighboring States Get Downpour; Kansas Suffers.

55 Counties Designated in Dry Areas; Plains Conference Called.

By William V. Nessly.

Nature's own drought relief was being poured upon large sections of the Midwest yesterday and last night, but the Government only increased its program of aid to those who have been sorely beset by continued record heat and distressing lack of moisture.

While life-giving rains were falling in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and other States, a burning sun still threatened increased damage elsewhere.

Kansas, home of Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, was added by the Administration to the States in which emergency drought conditions are officially recognized and to which extra relief funds are allocated. In Kansas 27 counties were so designated, along with 6 counties in Georgia, 20 in Missouri and 2 in South Dakota.

Blazing heat continued in Kansas, with all-time high record of 120 degrees at Phillipsburg and 113 degrees at Topeka, 116 at Hays and Salina, 115 at Hill City and 108 at Wichita, the Associated Press reported. High temperatures will continue in that State, Nebraska and South Dakota, it was forecast. Crop-saving rains and cooler weather were forecast for other States in the parched area, however.

Meanwhile, at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, the newly appointed Great Plains Drought Area Committee called a conference on up-stream engineering to discuss long-range drought relief planning through control of the "little water" supplies.

Parley to Be Here.

Morris L. Cooke, rural electrification administrator and chairman of the committee, said the conference would be held here September 23 and 24 and was in line with the President's request for such a study. The President also has requested the committee to meet him in the drought-stricken area next month, when the President plans a personal tour of inspection.

In addition to thousands of surface water dams to control the water supply, Cooke said the committee had in mind contour plowing and "strip" farming to help preserve moisture. The group has enlisted the aid of Dr. H. S. Pearson, author of "Little Waters," which discusses the flow of water before it reaches the creeks. Dr. Pearson is widely known as a specialist on land use and soil conservation.

An emergency relief step taken yesterday was authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the Chicago, Milwaukee & Pacific Railroad to extend to Idaho and Washington its reduced rates for shipment of suffering cattle to new pastures.

In Chicago, Western railroads made a contribution to relief by slashing freight rates on feed for cattle whose pastures have dried up. Rates on shipment of roughage were cut 50 per cent and those on hay, 66 2-3 per cent. The new rates were to take effect at once in Montana, North Dakota and portions of South Dakota.

Consumer to Get Break.

The consumer will get something of a break in lower poultry prices for the balance of this year, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics forecast yesterday in discussing the drought. Scarcity of feed will lead many farmers to sell chickens, it was predicted, and, in addition, the number of hens and pullets in farm flocks already was higher on June 1 than it was a year ago.

On the other hand, egg prices are to be higher, the bureau said, due to the "very small" stock in cold storage and "the improvement in incomes of city people generally," which is helping to sustain egg prices.

Aubrey Williams, deputy WPA administrator, announced that Administrator Harry Hopkins would confer with President Roosevelt on drought relief at the President's summer home at Campo Bello, New Brunswick, next Tuesday.

Continuing his on-the-ground relief work in the stricken sections, Resettlement Administrator Rexford G. Tugwell found many Wisconsin farmers would be in need of help before winter, and made available $500,000 for forage loans to producers whose pastures were destroyed by the heat.

At Des Moines, Iowa, the Associated Press quoted Secretary of Agriculture Wallace as saying that farmers in general should be much better off this year than last, with much more feed for livestock in spite of the drought, and fewer likestock to feed.

James Must Hang In Snake Slaying

Los Angeles, July 24 (AP).—Robert S. James was convicted of first-degree murder tonight for the rattlesnake drowning death of his seventh wife, Mary. The jury did not recommend life imprisonment so the death sentence is mandatory.

The Superior Court jury deliberated 9 hours.

James was charged with drowning his wife in a bathtub last August 4 after subjecting her to torture by the fangs of a rattlesnake. He allegedly killed her to collect $20,000 life insurance.

Sentence will be pronounced Tuesday morning.

Landon Starts Eastern Tour Late in August

Major Speeches Set for Birthplace, Buffalo and Chautauqua.

Aids Expect Pomerene, Baker, Al Smith Will Indorse Nominee.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A Staff Correspondent.

Topeka, Kans., July 24.—Satisfied with the reaction to his address accepting the Republican Presidential nomination, Gov. Alf M. Landon today turned his attention toward launching a speaking campaign to lay before the country reasons why the New Deal should be driven from Washington.

Republican National Chairman John Hamilton, after a conference with the Kansas Governor, announced Landon would leave between August 20 and 25 on the first leg of his campaign tour. This will include major addresses at his birthplace, West Middlesex, Pa., and at Buffalo, N. Y. He also will speak at Chautauqua, N. Y., and make numerous train platform appearances on his swing eastward.

Hamilton explained the different dates for the Eastern trip will be announced next week after final arrangements are completed with local committees. He said the Governor would make another tour of Eastern States later in the campaign.

Meanwhile, Gov. Landon went over other campaign plans with Hamilton, Hill Blackett, in charge of public relations, and members of his personal advisory staff. Hamilton will start on a tour of all Western States beginning August 3 which will take most of next month.

Expects Democrat's Aid.

Hamilton was enthusiastic over reception of the acceptance speech. He intimated that before the day ended, in some other part of the country, an outstanding Democrat would indorse the Landon candidacy. Newton D. Baker, Atlee Pomerene, former Ohio Senator and former RFC chairman, and Al Smith were mentioned in speculation here.

expected to support Gov. Landon, expected to support Gov. Landon and it is just a question of waiting for the psychological moment before they make their declarations. Baker, Secretary of War in the Wilson Administration, was understood here as waiting for the acceptance speech to reassure him on several points, especially foreign policy. He was reported to have been chilled by the nationalistic tone of the Republican platform which may account for the emphasis Gov. Landon placed on international co-operation last night.

The expectation that former Senator Pomerene would openly join the Landon supporters increased the belief Ohio would be found in the Republican column this fall. Senator Vic Donahey, one of the most popular Democrats in the State, has been cold on the New Deal and left the Philadelphia Convention to escape pressure that he make a seconding speech for President Roosevelt.

Whoever the Democrat is that Hamilton expected to make "big news" by declaring for Landon, the thought apparently put the Republican chairman in a happy frame of mind. He explained he had called eight observers by long-distance

Mrs. Maxwell Trial Will Be Continued

Trial of Mrs. Anne Maxwell, indicted jointly with her daughter, Edith Maxwell, for the slaying of Trigg Maxwell, will be continued when it comes up in Wise (Va.) Circuit Court, August 5, the Associated Press said, in reporting a statement of Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greear, yesterday.

After a trial last fall in which Edith Maxwell was sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment for the killing of her father, The Washington Post raised a fund for her defense. Miss Maxwell said she hit her father over the head with a slipper in self-defense. The Commonwealth maintained that he died as a result of the blow. The defense, on the other hand, questioned this statement.

The continuance of the mother's trial, Attorney Greear said, will afford time for a ruling by the Virginia Supreme Court on Edith Maxwell's appeal from the sentence imposed by a local jury.

Detroit Bishop Ready to Back Coughlin Talks

Gallagher in Naples Today, Expected to See Pope by Wednesday.

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, July 24.—Bishop Michael Gallagher of Detroit was expected tonight in high Vatican circles to make an earnest defense of Father Charles E. Coughlin, who faces possible discipline for political activities.

Bishop Gallagher, whom prelates call the "fighting bishop," is to arrive in Naples tomorrow en route to an audience with Pope Pius.

One of the subjects of their conference, high church circles believed, may be the radio priest's characterization of President Roosevelt as a "liar," a denunciation for which he publicly apologized yesterday.

Vatican officials talked with the American priest by transatlantic telephone last week, a reliable source declared. Whether the conversation had any connection with the apology was not disclosed.

Recall Bishop's Mildness.

Prelates tonight called attention to the "mildness" of a statement made by Bishop Gallagher after the priest attacked the President.

Then, they said, Gallagher "chided" Father Coughlin. This was believed to indicate, these sources close to the Vatican said, the bishop probably would exert his influence to save his subordinate from possible criticism.

Bishop Gallagher was not expected to see the Holy Father until Monday or Tuesday. During the interim, he probably will interview cardinals of the Consistorial Congregation which deals with American affairs. He was planning especially to see Mgr. Vincenzo Santoro, assessor of the congregation, it was reported.

Prelates pointed out it would be difficult for the Pope to take any disciplinary action against Father Coughlin merely on the ground the radio priest had taken part in politics.

Italian Case Cited.

Their belief arose, they said, from the precedent established by Don Sturzo, a Sicilian priest, who headed the second largest political party in Italy just before the advent of fascism.

Don Sturzo advocated such measures as distribution of land to those who worked it, and public ownership of municipal services — all

Madrid Cut Off In Hill Battles, Fascists Claim

60,000 to Attack City, Says Chief; Rebels Fleeing, Government Asserts.

By Harold G. Cardozo.

With Spanish Rebel Northern Army, Burgos, July 24.—Gen. Emilio Mola's three columns tonight held the key passes through Guadarrama to Madrid.

With 60,000 regulars and volunteers he is in a position to attack Madrid the moment contact is established with rebel troops moving from the south.

The generals in charge of the three northern columns have been moving forward cautiously. They have covered most of their advance with irregular Fascist and Monarchist volunteer forces—men who know every inch of the ground.

The three main columns now are marching down defiles onto the bare, rather desolate plateau on which Madrid is situated.

Advance guards are searching every hamlet for Red militia which now is the only armed force at the government's disposal—in the Madrid region at least. All army units are now with the insurgents.

(An Associated Press dispatch from Madrid disclosed Leftist government announcements that loyal troops had defeated the rebels with heavy losses at mountain passes to the city, the invaders fleeing in disorder. The government said danger to Madrid had ended. A United Press dispatch said the government claims to have held the passes. A United Press story from Gibraltar stated a rebel radio station at Seville had announced Gen. Mola's army had crushed loyalist forces outside Madrid and cut off the city's water, gas and electricity supplies.—Editor's note.)

"We formed a provisional government at Burgos because we thought it better to have a government ready to take over the moment we entered Madrid," Mola said.

Asked when he thought his forces would enter Madrid, he said:

"We should do so at any moment now as several of our columns are within 40 miles of the capital."

Gen. Mola said he hoped to take Madrid with as little loss of life as possible.

I witnessed the capture of Somo Sierra Pass in the Guadarrama Mountains yesterday. I was with the advance column.

High up in the pass appeared the twin headlights of a government military truck. Machine guns next to me began to chatter while a

Bolt Strikes Boy; Rain Cools City

Nearly half an inch of rain fell in a sudden and brief thunderstorm early yesterday afternoon. In nearby Riverdale, Md., Louie Wilkinson, 3 years old, had a lucky escape when he was only slightly burned by a bolt of lightning.

Just before the storm the temperature was 85 degrees. The rain cooled the city down to 65 degrees, but after skies had cleared, the mercury had risen to 82 at 5 p. m. The Weather Bureau predicted clear skies and moderate temperatures today.

The Wilkinson boy, according to his mother, Mrs. Leon Wilkinson, was leaning over a table near a kitchen window in their home, peering at the black clouds, when the lightning bolt flashed and knocked him down. At Providence Hospital he was treated for shock and a slight first-degree burn across the back. His parents took him home.

Reports on Outcome of Rebel-Loyalist Fights Are Contradictory.

The Spanish Revolt.

Ambassador Claude G. Bowers reported by telephone to the State Department last night that he was safe, but isolated, near San Sebastian. State Department revealed that bombs had been dropped around an American ship in the Straits of Gibraltar and that a vigorous protest had been made to Spanish rebel leaders.

There were contradictory reports of the outcome of fighting between government troops and the forces of Gen. Emilio Mola for control of mountain passes to Madrid. The government claimed rebels had been beaten off with heavy losses and said danger to the city had ended. At rebel headquarters at Burgos Gen. Burgos said the loyalists had been crushed and the passes gained. The government reported the capture of Seville. A Lisbon newspaper stated a battle was raging a mile and a half from the gates of Madrid.

Rebel Gen. Franco revealed a provisional government had been set up at Burgos. He said rebels are in power over 80 per cent of Spain.

There was heavy fighting in the north central sector, with the loyalists reporting the capture of San Sebastian. A force of 8,500 Leftists marched out of Barcelona to meet the Fascists at Zaragoza.

Bowers Is Safe.

By Felix Bruner.

Claude G. Bowers, United States Ambassador to Spain, of whom nothing had been heard since shortly after the revolution in that country started, talked with the State Department by telephone last night.

Bowers reported he was safe at Fuenterracia, about 5 miles from San Sebastian, but that most of his communication facilities had been cut off and that he was unable to cross the border into France, only a short distance away.

The battleship Oklahoma and the Coast Guard cutter Cayuga are in the harbor at San Sebastian, the Ambassador told Wilbur J. Carr, Assistant Secretary of State. He added, however, that Americans who wished to leave already had departed on a British cruiser. Other sources indicated that Americans are rapidly being taken from other coast cities, while those in Madrid were reported still safe.

Bombs Imperil Ship.

Earlier in the day the State Department revealed that bombs from a Spanish rebel plane had been dropped within 100 yards of an American freighter in the Straits of Gibraltar and that a vigorous protest had been made to Gen. Francisco Franco, rebel leader.

Bowers said in the telephone conversation that he had been receiving contradictory reports about conditions, and that he had been able to hear nothing from Seville and Madrid. He said there had been serious fighting in San Sebastian and that bullets had struck the hotel containing the American chancery. Two hotels, he said, had been taken over for hospitals.

The ambassador added that martial law was in effect in Barcelona and Malaga and that rebels have captured Pamplona, Burgos and Saragosa. The government, he said, was still in control at Madrid.

Americans Depart.

From Gibraltar Consul Herbert O. Williams reported that 27 Americans who had reached there from Seville had departed on a British warship.

The first direct word from Seville came last night in a message from Consul Charles Bay, sent to the British ship by one of the departing Americans. He said that after two days of continuous fighting government troops had succeeded

Holy Cross Student Saves Boy From Drowning in Md. Lake

A student at Holy Cross College, Brookland, D. C., was acclaimed a hero at Deep Creek Lake, Md., yesterday following his rescue of Eugene Sheldon Leggett, jr., 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene S. Leggett, of 3024 Macomb street. Mr. Leggett, a former president of the National Press Club, and correspondent for the Detroit Free Press, is now executive assistant of the National Emergency Council.

The student who saved the lad from drowning is Richard S. Grimm, 25, of Peoria, Ill. Grimm, a graduate of Notre Dame, is entering his last year of study for the priesthood. He has been studying this summer at a camp maintained at Deep Creek Lake by Holy Cross College.

During a violent storm, Grimm and other students at the camp noticed young Leggett's sailboat overturn. Several of them immediately put out from shore in a power boat.

Reaching the upset boat, Grimm plunged into the water after Leggett, who was struggling to maintain a hold on the overturned craft. With him were Caleb Winslow, jr., and an older companion whose name was not learned.

Assisting Grimm in the rescue were seven other students at the Holy Cross camp.

They were Felix Duffy, 27, of Detroit, Mich., a senior student at the college; George Brown, 26, of Portsmouth, Ohio., also a senior; Dennis Shugrue, 26, a third-year student; Louis Barcelo, 30, of Framingham, Mass., a third-year student; Robert Waide, 29, of Louisville, Ky., a senior; Jerome Lawyer, 25, of Portsmouth, Ohio, a second-year student, and Benjamin Hermier. Hermier was not known by Holy Cross College officials here.

Petition by Team Buoys Hope For Reinstating Eleanor Holm

By Alan Gould,

Associated Press Sports Editor.

Berlin, July 24.—A spontaneous rush of support by her teammates and coaches buoyed Eleanor Holm Jarrett's hopes of reinstatement today as America's Olympic athletes—334 strong—took up quarters in the Olympic village.

Although the swimmer's case appeared not nearly so hopeless as it had after her summary dismissal last night on charges of drinking in violation of training rules, some authoritative quarters called her chances of regaining her place "very slim."

Contrary to an earlier announcement by Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic committee, it was learned tonight that Mrs. Jarrett's name still was among the entries for the 100-meters backstroke event which she won at Los Angeles four years ago.

A swift sequence of developments in the case of the lovely 22-year-old New York swimming star, dropped from the team for alleged repeated violation of the antidrinking rules and flaunting the curfew, overshadowed the end of the voyage of Uncle Sam's athletic argosy.

While Mrs. Jarrett secluded herself in a Berlin hotel, tearfully pleading for "one more chance," and Brundage weighed the merits of the petition signed by 220 of her allies, the other athletes survived a series of official receptions.

Starting early this morning at Hamburg, where the liner Manhat-

Foes Denounce, Friends Praise Landon's Talk

Farley Declares Nominee 'Dodged,' Gov. Nice Calls Speech Great.

By the Associated Press.

The speech of Gov. Alf M. Landon accepting the Republican Presidential nomination evoked criticism and praise yesterday amidst a series of other developments bearing on the political campaign.

James A. Farley, in a statement as the Democratic chairman, said the Kansan appeared "more concerned with dodging" than with definitely discussing his principles last night.

Republican headquarters in Chicago made public messages of commendation, including one by Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland, saying it was "a great speech" giving "the honest and sound views of a great American." In another, Charles D. Hilles, the national committeeman for New York, said "his unequivocal declaration for the unshackling of initiative to free the spirit of American enterprise is most heartening."

President Roosevelt, who heard the address on his vacation schooner off the Nova Scotian coast, made no comment.

Glass Denies "Walk" Plans.

Among the happenings of the day, Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, said it was "nonsense" to interpret a recent assertion by him as indicative that he would "take a walk" from his party.

"Whither would I walk?" he asked reporters. "The Republican platform and nominee are certainly as far away from those things I mentioned as any Democrat could be."

His statement in question was that "we now have a system of government of privilege and discrimination."

In press conference here, Chairman Farley again predicted re-election of the President by more electoral votes than in 1932 and said "no bolting Democrat will draw enough support from others" to affect New Deal chances.

Regarding the reaction to the executive order placing all postmasterships under the civil service, he said no such move would have been necessary "if the Republicans had voted for one of those civil service bills in Congress last year."

Vandenberg Critical.

In a statement at Grand Rapids, meanwhile, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, said the Roosevelt order was "a neat scheme to give life jobs to existing Farley incumbents. Typically Rooseveltian is the fact that this thing is done by executive order, rather than by legislation."

The future course of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin in his announced intention to do all possible to defeat the President was a subject of speculation. Reliable sources at Vatican City said a transatlantic conversation took place between officials there and Father Coughlin last week. He has since apologized for calling the President a "liar," but whether the conversation had to do with that was not stated.

Among the Roosevelt supporters who found fault with the Landon speech were Representative O'Connor (Democrat), New York, and Francis J. Gorman, first vice president of the United Textile Workers.

The legislator, in a statement, said it was "as good a guess as any that the Governor's speech was written by the Manufacturers' Association and edited by the Liberty League."

"This hollow, hypocritical subterfuge," the Gorman statement said about Landon's position on collective bargaining, "is merely the lip service paid by the Republican Party to the growing urge of American labor to organize."

In New York, meanwhile, Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, asserted he felt that Landon's speech showed "no adequate grasp of the problems confronting us."

The Farley statement also took special notice of the Landon labor position, contending it "suggests the handiwork of the Manufacturers Association."

"Almost everything he advocated is already under way under the present Administration," said the Democratic manager. "To be sure, he implies he can do the job better than Franklin Roosevelt is doing it. But how he will go about this his message fails to reveal."

Farley told reporters that registration in some counties in Kansas showed ten times more Republicans had changed to Democratic registration than the other way around. He said Montgomery County, where the Landon home is, showed a shift favorable to the Democrats.

Senator Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, who frequently has accused the WPA of playing politics in his State, said Landon's assertion that relief economies would not be taken from the needy but "out of the hides" of politicians, "hit on the weakest part of the Administration."

Bolton Praises Speech.

Representative Bolton, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee, said in a statement:

"Gov. Landon's address * * * gives the American people a straightforward choice between sound, economical governmental administration along American lines, and the governmental monstrosities of the New Deal."

Representative Bacon (Republican), of New York, declared "Landon's acceptance speech was a natural."

Among Republican Senators who praised the speech were Townsend, of Delaware, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, and Austin, of Vermont.

Townsend said the nominee's speech "should have universal appeal to the American people, who have been led into a wilderness of confusion by the costly, wasteful, experimental New Deal Administration."

Austin said, "the form of the statement was notably simple, direct and understandable. There were no weasel words in it."

Politics and People

Roosevelt and Landon Objectives Similar; Appear to Differ Only in Methods.

By Franklyn Waltman

TOPEKA, Kans., July 24.—Now that Gov. Alf M. Landon has delivered his acceptance speech and briefly outlined the attitude he proposes to pursue in respect to most of the major questions of the year, some conclusions may be drawn as to the nature of the campaign before us.

WALTMAN.

The first thing that becomes clear is that the essential difference between President Roosevelt and his Republican opponent is one of form and approach, not of substance. Their objectives are very similar, but their methods differ. It is not a case of an ultra-conservative or reactionary opposing a liberal or a radical.

Despite all their talk about the Du Ponts and the American Liberty Leaguers, some of the New Dealers, as judged by their comment on the Landon acceptance speech, are just beginning to find out that Gov. Landon favors substantially the same things as does President Roosevelt. Since President Roosevelt is doing what Gov. Landon advocates, why not re-elect the President, asked the New Dealers?

It is a fair question and the burden of answering it rests squarely on Gov. Landon. It will be his job during this campaign to elaborate the charge he made in his acceptance speech that "practical progressives have suffered the disheartening experience of seeing many liberal objectives discredited during the past three years by careless thinking, unworkable laws and incompetent administration."

That charge, along with the accusation that the Roosevelt Administration, without approval of the people, has undertaken to override the constitutional safeguards against tyranny and oppression, constitutes the Republican case against President Roosevelt.

Gov. Landon, in his acceptance speech, did not undertake to prove the charge—he didn't have time to do so. But he intends to attempt to substantiate the indictment in a series of campaign speeches which he will make from coast to coast. As he goes along it will become the job of President Roosevelt to make his answers.

The Republican nominee proposes to devote at least one campaign speech to each of the issues enumerated in his acceptance speech and perhaps some others. Thus he will undertake to demonstrate to the country that "careless thinking, unworkable laws and incompetent administration" are responsible for a part of the huge debt piled up during the New Deal and that it was not the result solely of humanitarian and socially necessary policies called for by the depression.

He will undertake to show that business recovery has not advanced to the extent it would have, had the Roosevelt Administration refrained from experimenting with "arbitrary and uncertain" monetary and other policies. He will undertake to demonstrate that the present social security act is "unworkable" and requires revision.

He will undertake to show that the AAA program had the effect of destroying markets for the farmer and that this result "far outweighs the value of all the benefits paid to farmers." He proposes to show that under the NRA the New Deal promoted monopolies and monopolistic practices and that the little fellow has been hurt instead of helped. And so on with other issues.

Gov. Landon's approach will be that of the "everyday American." His speeches, as was the acceptance address, will be temperate and reasoning, free from vituperation or angry assaults. His delivery will be commonplace and free from oratorical efforts—the speech of any average American arising to address his fellows in the forum place. He is the antithesis of President Roosevelt, and will not depart from that role during the campaign. It is his best bet.

All this is definite Landon strategy, but it is likewise in character for the man. He is not an orator. He is not a superman. He thinks slowly, but sticks to his conclusions, once they are reached. He keeps his feet on the ground, even when the stars are being pointed out to him. He has the habit when grandiose plans are outlined to him of asking: "How can that be done?" or, "Where will the money come from?"

An observer at the Landon acceptance ceremony made the contention that so cleverly had the nominee's speech been written that, on its face, it could be interpreted as designating an ultra-conservative course, or a liberal course of action. There is some truth in that observation. As is the case now with President Roosevelt's speeches, Gov. Landon's speeches should be read against the background of the man.

What has been his record? Does he mean what he says or are mental reservations hidden between phrases? Kansans are authority for the statement that Gov. Landon means what he says and carries out his political promises, even when it becomes painful to him to do so.

Moreover, he has not been aligned with reactionary elements in his past career. He was a disciple of Theodore Roosevelt in the Bull Moose movement. He fought for years and finally defeated the Dave Mulvane Old Guard Republicans in this State. He has been a small, independent oil operator, and knows from bitter experience the effect of industrial monopoly.

Judging his future course by his past actions and his background, it appears that the country can take at its face value whatever Gov. Landon says. Thus we are ready for the political trench warfare to begin.

Landon Tour Set for August

telephone in various States and received from each a favorable report on reaction to the acceptance address.

Among the 1,000 or more telegrams received at Gov. Landon's office felicitating him upon the acceptance speech, a number were from Democrats of some prominence, it was said. None of these telegrams was made public.

As was anticipated, the Landon remarks on organized labor brought the sharpest criticism. But the Landon strategists expected this part of the speech would strike a sour note with organized labor leaders, although they believed the Governor's candid statement of his attitude on that question would appeal to the country generally.

The belief prevails here that President Roosevelt has won the leaders of organized labor and that there is no reason why Governor Landon should modify any of his views or make any other gesture in their direction. But this thought applies only to the leaders of organized labor. It is doubted here that union leaders can deliver their followings en bloc to the President and that some of these unionists may agree with the Landon statement regarding labor.

Gov. Landon arrived at his office today before 8 a. m., getting there before his secretary, Willard Mayberry, a former cowboy. He went to work at once, reading mail and telegrams and dictating some replies. He also conferred briefly with several State officials regarding Kansas business.

Soon after Landon arrived at his office, workmen commenced tearing down the platform erected outside the Statehouse for the acceptance speech and cleaners commenced the immense task of gathering up the litter scattered all over the town, giving usually clean and prim-looking Topeka the appearance of a circus lot the day after the big top is pulled down.

The Governor spent most of the day conferring with his political advisers and other leaders brought here by the acceptance ceremonies. He has no plans at this time for any further vacation and will remain in Topeka for the next few days at least. Mrs. Landon and the Governor's daughter, Peggy Anne, returned to Estes Park, Colo., tonight. When the Governor will join them has not been decided.

Among those who called on the Governor were Mrs. Robert Lincoln Hoyal, assistant to Hamilton; Harry P. Guggenheim, former Ambassador to Cuba, who told newsmen "this man is so near a President I won't say anything now;" Patrick J. Hurley, former Secretary of War, who said Landon had delivered "a great speech" and expressed the belief that "a vigorous, sincere campaign against bureaucracy and extravagance" would carry Oklahoma; Arthur Ballantine, former Undersecretary of the Treasury; C. Bascom Slemp, once secretary to President Coolidge, who said the acceptance address was "a plain declaration of principles which cannot help but arrest the attention of the country," and Oscar De Priest, Negro former Representative from Chicago, who termed the speech "simple, practical, understandable."

To questioners at a noon press conference, Hamilton gave these campaign views:

"We're going to carry Illinois. I don't think Cook County will tear down our down-State majority this time. . . . We'll carry upstate New York by 750,000, reduce the city majority and take the State by half a million. . . . To use Jim Farley's expression, Ohio is in the bag. . . . There's a Landon swing on in Missouri. We've a good chance of carrying the State if we get an honest count in Kansas City.

"I'm starting West August 3 and will make every State west of the Mississippi. . . . Perhaps not Arkansas. . . . I don't remember which side of the river Louisiana is on.

"We've divided this campaign as far as possible into two parts: convince the people and get them to express it."

French Strikers Stay Intrenched in Factories

Paris, July 24 (AP).—Twenty thousand striking metal workers in northern France tonight refused to heed a government announcement that the strike was settled. They continued to occupy factories.

At Montbeliard 5,000 of the workers paraded the streets singing the "Internationale" while their colleagues kept in the metal plants, disregarding an appeal of a workers' committee which accepted the government accord.

Seamen's Plight Is 'Desperate,' U. S. Aid Told

Union Brands Juridical Report False; Strike of 10,000 Averted.

By Sidney Olson.

A report vigorously attacking working conditions in the American Merchant Marine, and picturing the American seamen as in a "desperate situation," was presented to Acting Secretary of Commerce J. M. Johnson here yesterday by Louis S Weiss, of the International Juridical Association of New York.

Immediately from New York came a statement from the powerful International Seamen's Union outlawing the report as "concocted by radicals attempting to stir up dissension," and as "false throughout," according to a United Press dispatch from New York City.

At the same time came word from Savannah, Ga., that Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, had averted a threatened strike of 10,000 longshoremen from Wilmington, N. C., to Pensacola, Fla., which would have paralyzed shipping in eight South Atlantic ports.

The New Deal's ace labor troubleshooter said that the strike, set for midnight Sunday, had been called off under truce calling for conferences to discuss union recognition and higher pay, to be held at Tampa, Fla., from August 10 on.

The statement presented by Mr. Weiss, a New York attorney, to Col. Johnson, was based on a legal study and an "impartial survey" of the conditions under which seaman work. Its primary point, aside from the detailed assault on food, supervision, wages, working conditions and hours of sailors, was presentation of arguments that there is no basis for accusing of mutiny seamen who strike on a vessel moored in a port of safety.

Denial Is Made.

Col Johnson then officially denied to Mr. Weiss and newspapermen that either his superior, Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, or himself, had said that such a strike constituted mutiny.

He also said that in his opinion, if no question of passenger safety was involved, seamen striking in a port of safety were not in a state of mutiny.

The two statements were considered completely counter to the expressed attitude and words of Secretary Roper on March 14 of this year, following a Cabinet meeting in the White House, when he boldly asserted that strike ringleaders should be prosecuted for mutiny in the case of the Panama-Pacific Line's S. S. California, tied up by striking seamen in San Pedro Harbor from March 2 to March 5.

Johnson told Weiss that neither he nor Roper had labeled the disorder as such and that to the best of his knowledge no other Department of Commerce official had so termed it.

The report brought in by Weiss was signed by a committee of prominent citizens, writers and lawyers, including Amos Pinchot, George Soule, William McFee, Dorothy Van Doren, Nathan Greene, Samuel L. M. Barlow, Bruce Bliven, Paul F. Brissenden, Walter Gellhorn, James P. Gifford, Jerome Michael, Whitney North Seymour, Kenneth E. Walser, Bethuel M. Webster, jr., and Herbert T. Wechsler.

On March 14, at a Cabinet meeting, Secretary Roper was said to have overridden suggestions of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and to have called on the Department of Justice for immediate prosecution of the ringleaders in the California strike.

The Commerce Department head said that the act of the seamen on the S. S. California constituted mutiny.

Secretary Perkins said it was merely a strike. It was later learned that she worked at some length to prevent the sailors' arrest.

Roper, asserting that he bore "no antagonism" toward the Labor Secretary, told reporters that the strikers had violated the law of the sea, and that the laws governing mutiny applied even when a ship was in harbor, whatever the merits of the demand for higher pay.

Referred to Cummings.

He said he had disposed of it by turning the matter over to the Attorney General, Homer Cummings, for action, and that the department's opinion would prevail. Brian MacMahon, Assistant Attorney General, promised immediate action at the time, but little was done, and intimations from time to time that the case has been dropped have not been denied by the department, and have been unofficially confirmed.

The report emphasizes the question of mutiny charges against striking seamen for the following reasons, quoted from the report:

"Government officials have been quick to bring the charges of mutiny against striking seamen. They have on the other hand shown little zeal to investigate charges, check violations of safety statutes, or remedy intolerably bad working conditions.

"The seamen are thus faced with a dilemma. On the one hand, responsible Government officials refuse to take any action looking toward the improvement of working conditions. On the other hand these same Government officials seek to make it a criminal offense for seamen themselves to seek to better their working conditions through their own collective effort."

The report states that wages paid to seamen are substantially lower than those paid other workers; that working-hour regulations are inadequate and so riddled with exceptions that they can be "disregarded with impunity;" that living conditions are governed by antiquated statutes, which "are not even observed;" that the food diet is unbalanced, "often so poor in quality as to be inedible;" that living quarters seriously "impair the health and efficiency of the personnel," and on through a long list of "unfair" actions.

The report asked for an immediate impartial investigation by the Department of Commerce.

The report was presented to the department without authorization by the International Seamen's Union. That brought about the blast from C. H. Angle, general secretary of the union.

Joseph Curran, head of a minority group of seamen who struck last spring, stated in New York yesterday when he heard that Angle had attacked the report:

"This is the same thing as an open declaration of war. Another strike will hit the Atlantic coast this fall and it will be the biggest the East has ever seen."

Rebels Routed In Madrid Area, Officials Aver

Government Is Confident, Orders Militia to End Patrol of Streets.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, July 24.—A rebel advance on Madrid from the northwest was smashed in a day-long battle in the Guadarrama Mountains and the government claimed tonight the danger of attack on the capital had been definitely averted for the present.

The invaders, driven off with heavy losses by massed battalions of civil guards, assault guards and militia in the conflict on the rough mountain slopes, were reported tonight in full flight toward Segovia.

So confident was the government of a complete victory that it ordered the militia, which had been patroling the capital's streets in private cars, to go back to work. Only official vehicles will be permitted on the streets, the government announced.

At the same time, however, it ordered conscripts who had been scheduled to join the colors in November to report August 1.

Conflicting Report.

[A United Press dispatch from rebel headquarters at Burgos quoted Gen. Emilio Mola as announcing the insurgents held the passes to the city.—Editor's note.]

Official sources declared the city of Seville, rebel-dominated southern stronghold, had surrendered. The reports to the capital were not immediately confirmed.

In the north the retreating insurgents of the army of Gen. Emilio Mola left behind large quantities of equipment and material, the report declared, after terrific fighting in mountain passes near Somo Sierra, Segovia and Avila.

Desertions from the Fascist ranks, it was declared, accompanied the smashing defeat administered by loyal troops composed of army regulars, civil and assault guards, and civilian militia.

Massed atop the rugged passes, the Loyalists met and repulsed the advancing hordes of rebels attempting vainly to spread the anti-government rebellion to the capital itself.

Fatigued from their long march southward, the Fascist troops were hurled against the concentrated Leftists positions, only to be driven back with subsequent "considerable advances" by the pursuing defenders.

On two other fronts, additional columns of Liberals moved on rebel strongholds.

Planes Aid Advance.

Armed workers from Barcelona were reported in sight of Zaragoza after a steady advance from the northeastern coastal city. Squadrons of government planes roared overhead, aiding the ground advance with a steady and prolonged bombardment of insurgent headquarters in the city.

A hastily formed band of Fascists which began a march toward Madrid from Jadrague was reported routed in the rugged terrain in the northern sector.

Across the southern frontier, fresh loyal militiamen were drawing a line of defense against a possible attack from that direction. The situation of the rebels was declared to have become increasingly difficult after the city of Cordoba fell to the government.

Fighting near Somo Sierra was described by the Communist Deputy Ibarruari, who said the militia's defense was featured by courageous acts.

Sweeping Advances.

The deputy flew to the capital from west of the northern front, where he said the Loyalist troops made sweeping advances in the face of enemy attacks.

Madrid was slowly returning to normal. Business increased and cafes re-opened to renewed patronage.

Authorities organized agencies to care for wounded brought in from the battle regions, and a central hospital was designated for concentration of the injured soldiers.

Communist, socialist and syndicalist organizations gave united support to emergency measures for conservation of food and maintenance of public safety.

Rebels Claim Territory.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

General headquarters, Spanish Rebel Northern Army, July 24.—Gen. Emilio Mola, commanding insurgent Spanish troops in the north, proclaimed today that 80 per cent of Spanish territory is in rebel hands.

He proclaimed establishment of a provisional government at the ancient city of Burgos under the presidency of Gen. San Miguel Cabalellas.

He declared that pending completion of elaborate preparations to storm Madrid with a formidable military force the rebels were determined to bring the capital to the point of starvation.

"After all, is it not better to reduce Madrid by hunger than by cannon?" he asked.

Mola's methods in the territory he controls are stern.

Before he entered Burgos, where a general strike had been called against the revolution, he was preceded by this laconic order:

"I give the workers one hour in which to return to work. I give them three hours in which to die."

The strike ended after one execution.

Predicts Madrid Victory.

Rebel Headquarters, Tetuan, Spanish Morocco, July 24.—Spain's Fascist-Monarchist rebellion continues victorious, Gen. Francisco Franco, commanding rebel troops in Spanish Morocco, proclaimed to the world tonight.

In an announcement broadcast from his radio station at Tetuan, Franco said the fall of Madrid was imminent.

He announced the provisional government established at Burgos represents all elements among the rebellious forces.

Fighting in Madrid.

Lisbon, Portugal, July 24 (AP).—The rebel radio station at Tetuan, Spanish Morocco, asserted tonight two infantry regiments in Madrid had revolted against the liberal government and that fierce fighting had broken out in that capital.

in putting down the revolutionists. He added, however, that since then the city has been bombed from the air. He said Spanish military authorities had co-operated in evacuating British and Americans.

Information of the attempted bombing of an American ship came from Maxwell Blake, consul general at Tangier, who said the master of the American steamer Exmouth had reported that three bombs dropped within 100 yards of his vessel on Wednesday.

Blake reported that Franco, in answer to his protest, "promised to give strict orders to prevent a recurrence of such regretable incidents."

Meanwhile, the Exeter, a merchant ship pressed into rescue work was taking aboard Americans at Barcelona. Others were being taken aboard British, French and Italian warships at various ports.

Late last night the State Department learned that the Exeter, with 164 refugees aboard, had left Barcelona for Marseilles. It is expected to land its passengers at the French port this morning.

The ship then will proceed to Las Palmas, Canary Islands, its regular port of call, where it will take on American refugees.

Americans in the interior, particularly at Madrid, had little hope of leaving the country. From Madrid the State Department was informed that 140 United States citizens were now living in the embassy. The situation in the Spanish capital was reported to be much quieter.

An odd story of a British sea captain being awarded a military cross by the rebels as an apology for bombing his ship was relayed by Consul Herbert Williams, at Gibraltar.

Williams said that on Thursday afternoon the British ship Gibeldris was shelled by rebel planes in the Straits of Gibraltar. The British warship Whitehall fired at the planes. Gen. Franco, Williams said, presented the captain of the bombed ship with a military cross. He reported that Franco also had apologized for sending planes over Gibraltar.

Conditions at San Sebastian, from which foreigners are now rapidly being removed, were described in a communication from Hallett Johnson, counsellor of the American Embassy, as "horrible." He said the city was without government.

Situation Threatening.

At Bilbao, it was reported to the State Department, the situation remains threatening. The message said that since Sunday thousands of troops, especially armed laborers, have gone in motor vehicles to take a stand against the rebels at Vitoria. The report said a major encounter there is imminent.

A report that a Spanish clerk in the employ of the American consulate at Barcelona had been slain while riding in an automobile carrying an American flag, was confirmed. Consul Lynn W. Franklin reported:

"Death of Clerk Santiago Itsurralde confirmed. Body brought to Barcelona by authorities last night. His companion, British subject, also killed at same time. Death of Itsurralde deeply felt, as he died endeavoring to protect Americans. Served this consulate faithfully 17 years. Leaves family and four children penniless. Local authorities have expressed concern, sympathy and regret."

Franklin also reported that sufficent facilities for taking American light field gun sent a dozen shells up the pass.

The flashes of exploding shells lit up the night.

Dozen Shells Fired.

When dawn came, the sound of heavy guns took everybody into the open. About every minute the report of a 4-inch gun followed a little patch of smoke over the top of the pass. Rifle shots echoed back and forth.

About a dozen shells were fired. After the first few bursts, all was silent save for a few rifle shots from the retreating Red militia.

Half an hour later, a great column of trucks moved into position for the advance. Horses dragged up the 4-inch gun and all was in readiness.

Just then the dispatch riders arrived with the news the advance column had gone over the top of Somo Sierra Pass.

Message Intercepted.

Madrid, July 24 (AP).—The government asserted tonight that it had intercepted a radio message from Gen. Francisco Franco, leader of the rebellion, to Juan March, supposed to be Spain's richest man, and that it believed March financed the revolt.

March, a former member of the Chamber of Deputies, was expelled in 1931 because of "moral incompatibility." He was arrested and jailed in Madrid on a charge of bribery.

March escaped and went to Marseille. Late in 1933 the Spanish Parliament approved his election as a deputy and he was allowed to return.

Americans Evacuated.

Hendaye, France, July 24 (AP).—The United States warship Oklahoma arrived at San Sebastian tonight to evacuate foreigners, but many of them already had been removed by British and French ships.

U. S. citizens among the 600 foreigners evacuated were taken by the British destroyer Verity to St. Jean de Luz, France.

Included among them were:

Sidney Heldburg, a Dr. Heldburg, Mrs. Sarah Loder, Lois Loder, Anna Weinstein, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andlade, a Miss Morrison and a Miss Dunham. No addresses were available for the group.

Among those who fled from Seville were:

Miss Ethel Mackey, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Miss Anne Rigney, New York City; J. R. McElroy, Pittsburgh; Dr. and Mrs. Daniel B. Esterly, Topeka, Kans.; Mr. and Mrs. Dirk Stamler, New York; Dr. and Mrs. Robert B. Silver, New York, and Miss Eleanor Perret, New York.

The Americans said they were compelled to remain in Seville hotels three days and nights during heavy fighting in the streets. Bullets, they said, struck doors and shutters of the hotels. They reported Seville Cathedral struck by many bullets, but little damage was incurred.

Living Expense Here Exceeds 58 Other Cities

WPA Survey Indicates It Costs 20 Per Cent More Than in Mobile.

If your family is one of moderate means, it costs you more to live in Washington than it would in any of 58 other representative cities throughout the country, according to a report published yesterday by WPA investigators.

The study, conducted in co-operation with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, showed that it costs a family of four 20.6 per cent more to live in Washington than in Mobile, Ala., where expenses are lowest.

The study was based on prices in May, 1935, but Miss Margaret Stecker, who directed the survey, said there had been no significant price changes since that time.

Miss Stecker said that high rents were responsible for the heavier cost of living in Washington. The index figure for the cost here was 100, that for San Francisco, the next most expensive, was 98. Minneapolis was 97.8, New York City, 97, and Chicago, 95.6.

Food costs were found to be highest in Bridgeport, Conn.; clothing costs hit their peak in Butte, Mont.; household operation costs were greatest in Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

Rents were lowest in Portland, Oreg.; food costs least in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; clothing costs were lowest in Dallas and household operation costs in Houston, Tex.

No individual families were questioned in the study, the figures being based on a standard of living for workers of small means.

Raft Found in Sea May Be Nunoca's

Miami, Fla., July 24 (U.P.).—Capt. Sam Henning, veteran of the sea, tonight inspected a length of rope on a life raft salvaged by Coast Guardsmen as possible wreckage from the lost ship Nunoca and decided the rope and wood were products of Gran Cayman Island.

Henning said he believed the Nunoca had carried his wife and son to death with the 20 other persons aboard the 110-foot vessel.

Henning, resident of the island, and a frequent passenger on the Nunoca, would not say the raft, picked up on a Florida key, had been part of the vessel's equiment. The Nunoca left the Caribbean island July 4, never to be seen again, again.

Other mariners will be called to inspect the objects salvaged from the sea.

A note from the "captain of the Nunoka" appealing for "help," found bobbing in a bottle in Biscayne Bay last night, was deemed a hoax tonight.

The search for additional clews continued around the Southern tip of Florida, with virtually the entire Coast Guard strength of this area enlisted in the hunt.

without encountering opposition from the Vatican.

On the other hand, the Pontiff was represented as being opposed to participation of priests in politics.

The Holy See has been observing the activities of Father Coughlin for several years, one prelate disclosed. Cardinal Fumasoni Biondi, while still apostolic delegate to Washington before becoming a cardinal in 1933, made a lengthy inquiry into the priest's activities, it was said.

Coughlin Silent.

Detroit, July 24 (AP).—Father Charles E. Coughlin withheld comment today upon reports that he had been in telephone communication with high church authorities in Vatican City prior to his published apology to President Roosevelt whom he called a "liar" in recent address.

Members of the priest's staff, however, said he had talked with his superior, Bishop Michael J. Gallagher, by telephone after the bishop sailed from New York on a pilgrimage to Rome.

There was no intimation of what that communication involved.

Father Coughlin's apology to President Roosevelt appeared today in his publication, Social Justice.

The priest, whose radio addresses and political activities have brought him national recognition, has said that he would gladly conform to any recommendations from the Vatican that he curtail his social justice preaching.

Bishop Gallagher refrained from curbing Father Coughlin's activities.

Participating with him in a radio program in April, 1935, the bishop declared "I pronounce Father Coughlin sound in doctrine, able in its application and interpretation. Freely I give him my imprimatur on his written word and freely I give him my approval of his spoken word."

Father Coughlin established the Shrine of the Little Flower in Royal Oak when he came here ten years ago. The shrine was conceived years Bishop Gallagher and through Father Coughlin's efforts has grown from a small wooden building to a modernistic, cruciform structure which it has been estimated cost more than $1,000,000.

In the basement of the shrine is located the office of the priest's National Union for Social Justice, and in the $300,000 tower are special studies from where he broadcasts each winter and spring his weekly addresses on social justice.

Bank Will Pay Third Dividend To Depositors

Receiver for United States Savings to Distribute $170,000.

The 6,900 depositors of the United States Savings Bank, closed since 1933, will receive a 10 per cent dividend totaling $170,000, William Prentiss, jr., acting comptroller of the currency, announced yesterday.

Prentiss said he ordered Carter B. Keene, receiver of the bank, to distribute the dividend checks "as rapidly as possible." The payments were to start going out yesterday.

Distribution of this dividend, the third made by the receiver, had been held up because of the suit Wade H. Cooper, former president of the bank, had filed to dissolve the receivership, according to the acting comptroller.

The U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia last Monday dismissed the case, thereby affirming, Prentiss said, "the judgment of the trial court to the same effect."

Funds for the payment of the new dividend were made possible by an additional loan obtained by the receiver from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The loan, made on the remaining assets of the bank, was based on a commitment obtained several months ago.

Prentiss warned depositors not to apply at the bank for their dividends until they had reecived word from the receiver.

"To enable this (the distribution) to be accomplished in an orderly manner, depositors and creditors will be notified by mail when their checks will be available," the comptroller said. "They should not call at the receiver's office for the checks until such notice has been received."

The 10 per cent dividend declared yesterday brings the total of the dividend payments made to depositors to a total of $1,537,930. The first dividend was one of 65 per cent, the second was 15 per cent. These added to the third announced yesterday raises the percentage total to 90.

10 New Cases Reported In Paralysis Outbreak

Montgomery, Ala., July 24 (AP).—Reports of 10 new cases of infantile paralysis—six in Alabama and four in Tennessee—caused health authorities to redouble efforts today to check the outbreak that has stricken 262 and claimed 16 lives.

Today's cases brought to 195 the total cases reported in Alabama and to 54 those in Tennessee. No new cases were reported in Mississippi, where the number diagnosed in the tri-State outbreak remained at 13.

membership in the Reserve System. Each member bank is required to subscribe to an amount of stock in fixed ratio to its own capitalization.

The 6 per cent dividend is fixed by law as a maximum. Earnings in excess of that amount go into surpluses. When net earnings fall below 6 per cent, the surplus fund may be drawn upon to declare the full dividend.

Last year the 12 banks combined, despite a $69,000 operating deficit at the Minneapolis bank, paid a normal dividend, amounting to $8,504,974, and $641,301 was transferred to surplus.

Illustrating the importance of the yield on Government securities to the income of the banks, their combined gross earnings totaled $42,751,000, of which $39,796,117 was interest paid on Federal obligations.

The Treasury's heavy refinancing operations of the last few years have materially reduced the average interest rate on such securities. In 1933, the average rate of Government bonds was 3.31 per cent. Now it is 2.51 per cent. In the last year alone the yield of Government short-term paper has fallen from .17 per cent to .09 per cent.

City Saves Sparrow.

New York, July 24 (AP).—Seymour Filler, 15, called on a city's might—as well as the American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—today to save from death a baby sparrow wedged between window panes of an unoccupied apartment.

Seymour called the police, the fire department and finally the A. S. P. C. A. A policeman at great risk scaled a ladder to save the bird. The society gave it a cottonlined cage and planned to release it Sunday.

One Slain in Holdup In N. Y.; $858 Loot

New York, July 24 (AP).—A 25-year-old employe of the Globe Sales Manufacturing Co., Edward Barnes, was shot and killed late today after an $858 holdup of the company as he grappled with one of the suspected robbers.

Joseph Cohen, 23, was charged with Barnes' murder.

Two gunmen bound Ethel Landing, company cashier, and an elevator operator, wresting from her the pay roll envelopes she carried, and fleeing.

Barnes and Joseph Angyal, another employe, gave chase. The former was shot as he struggled with one of the fleeing men, identified by police as Cohen.

Jury Pondering Fate of Peifer In Kidnap Case

Is Only Man of 7 Indicted to Be Given Trial for Hamm Abduction.

St. Paul, July 24.—The case of John P. Peifer, on trial the last nine days as a conspirator in the William Hamm kidnaping, was given to a Federal Court jury at 7:23 p. m. (E.S.T.) today.

The jury went to dinner immediately and made preparations to deliberate after the meal. Judge M. M. Joyce announced he would accept a verdict "up to a reasonable hour tonight."

Peifer was accused by the Government of helping plot the kidnaping of the wealthy St. Paul brewer on June 15, 1933. The prosecution's main witness, Byron Bolton, confessed kidnaper, testified $10,000 was Peifer's share of the $100,000 ransom while $25,000 was "set aside" for Tom Brown, former St. Paul police chief, for conveying police activities to the gang during Hamm's imprisonment.

Of seven men indicted, Peifer was the only defendant to stand trial. Two, Arthur (Doc) Barker and Elmer Farmer, are in Alcatraz Prison serving terms for the Edward G. Bremer abduction on January 17, 1934, and the other four pleaded guilty. Awaiting sentence, after admissions of guilty, are Charles Fitzgerald, of Los Angeles; Edmund C. Bartholmey, of Bensenville, Ill.; Alvin Karpis, Erstwhile No. 1 public enemy, and Bolton.

In delivering his 36-page charge to the jury, Judge Joyce asserted that mere suspicion is not sufficient to justify a verdict but added that "a conviction may be had upon circumstantial evidence."

Game Charges Face 2 Seized By Vice Squad

Two men were arrested and charged with setting up a gaming table following a raid on a cigar store in the 1700 block of Fourteenth street northwest, yesterday as the vice squad continued its drive against gamblers and white slave traffickers.

One hundred numbers books, betting sheets and race track data were confiscated by the raiders who surprised eight players awaiting returns from race tracks throughout the country by wire.

The players were released as witnesses. The men arrested gave their names as Albert Clayton, 38, of the 1500 block of D street northest, and Charles Harrison, 33, colored, of the 900 block of Third street northwest. They were released for a hearing before Commissioner Needham C. Turnage today on $1,500 bond.

Detective Roy E. Blick, of the vice squad, and two Department of Justice agents, meanwhile were questioning Mary Sherman Hippie and Ida Jackson, colored, alleged operators of a white slave ring, working between the South and Washington.

Jean Gordon, 23, arrested at a house in the 1400 block of Belmont street northwest, Wednesday, told police the Sherman woman, who operates at the Belmont street address, had 15 girls in her employ, some of whom were brought here from the South.

Tractor Injuries Fatal.

Fulton Scott, 50-year-old Fairfax Station, Va., saw mill employe, died Thursday night in Alexandria Hospital from injuries received when a tractor he drove overturned and his body was jammed against the steering wheel.

King's Assailant Asks to Relate His 'Own Story'

McMahon Remanded to Jail for Week; Tells of 'Persecution.'

By the Associated Press.

London, July 24.—His eyes feverishly bright, George Andrew McMahon, the man who dared approach King Edward with a revolver in his hand, sat through a rendition of his grievances against the government today.

At the close of his preliminary hearing in the grimy Bow Street police station courtroom, he was remanded to jail for a week on the plea of his counsel that the prisoner wished to testify himself and to call witnesses.

McMahon was charged specifically with producing a weapon "with intent to alarm his majesty" at the king's military parade eight days ago.

Asks to Tell Story.

Lunging forward in the prisoner's dock, he climaxed the hearing with his demand, transmitted through counsel, Alfred Kerstein, that he be allowed to tell his own story of what he termed a three-year persecution.

He fidgeted as witnesses depicted the scene in which he was chief actor on Constitution Hill. What he called a product of "my own tortured brain" was read into the record. It was a letter sent Sir John Simon, the secretary, in which McMahon insisted he had been hounded by Sir John's office. The home office, he related, refused to permit him to publish a magazine after he was convicted of criminal libel in 1933.

Treason Charge.

McMahon formally was charged under a nearly century-old treason act.

Twelve witnesses testified, among them England's hero constable, Anthony Gordon Dick, who smashed at the pistol hand of the prisoner as the king rode by.

Constable Ernest Daniel Mayne testified "McMahon was running hard into the roadway straight for the king when I grappled with him. He had gone 6 or 8 feet when I grabbed him. He then was about 10 yards from the king."

Attorney General Sir Donald Somervell quoted the prisoner as telling police, "I wanted to shoot myself in front of the king, but I lost my head."

business in the southeast part of the city.

Thompson said O'Brien and three other men were standing in front of the southeast restaurant early Tuesday morning when an automobile containing Tear, Montgomery and Bond drove up.

The three tried to force O'Brien to get into the car with them, the inspector said.

Wounded Thrice.

When he and his companion took to their heels, Tear and Montgomery drew pistols and blazed away after them, it was said. O'Brien was struck with three shots, twice in the left leg and once in the right.

One of the men who was with O'Brien has been located by police and was held as a witness. The other two are known to authorities and are being sought, Thompson said.

During the investigation of the shooting it was rumored at police headquarters that there was an "understanding" between persons close to the Police Department through which certain racketeers were to get a measure of protection from arrest.

Both Superintendent of Police Ernest W. Brown and Inspector Thompson discredited this story. Brown flatly declined to comment except to say he believed nothing approaching graft existed in the department and that if he had the slightest hint of such an agreement he would order a thorough investigation.

School Secretaries' Head Visiting Capital

Miss Louise Henderson, of Philadelphia, reached Washington yesterday for a few days' visit following her election as president of the National Association of School Secretaries at the national convention this month in Portland, Oreg.

Miss M. Alvina Carroll, secretary to Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of Washington public schools, was named to the executive committee of the national association at its election.

American Navy Leading World In Construction

95 Fighting Ships Being Built or Provided for by Appropriations.

By the Associated Press.

Speeding to build its Navy to the full strength authorized by existing Navy pacts before they expire December 31, the United States now is leading the world in naval construction.

The Naval Intelligence Division yesterday published figures showing that the United States now has 95 fighting ships of 287,915 tons under construction or appropriated for, and is entitled to convert 44,510 more tons into warcraft before the year's end.

The Navy reported on July 1 that 79 ships of 265,515 tons now are actually under construction, many nearing completion. All ships provided for in the building program are scheduled to be on the high seas by 1942.

Ships under construction and planned include 3 aircraft carriers, 2 heavy cruisers, 9 light cruisers, 63 destroyers and 18 submarines. The Navy now has 324 ships of 1,080,715 tons

The British admiralty has announced that, as quickly as the present navy pacts end, they propose to lay down two new battleships, with construction expected to begin early in 1937.

Admiral William H. Standley, acting Secretary of the Navy, has let it be known that when Great Britain begins construction, the United States plans to start building two of its own to replace over-age fighting craft and match the British.

Great Britain has 64 ships of 225,096 tons under construction or appropriated for. The new British warcraft include two aircraft carriers, 16 light cruisers, 35 destroyers and 11 submarines. The British now have 307 ships of 1,224,329 tons.

Japan is adding to its navy of 213 fighting craft of 772,797 tons by building 34 new ships of 93,907 tons, including two aircraft carriers, four light cruisers, 20 destroyers and 8 submarines.

The French navy of 178 ships of 558,452 tons is being increased by the construction of 39 new vessels of 194,098 tons, including four capital ships five light cruisers, 20 destroyers and 10 submarines. France under the present treaty also is permitted to lay down 52,000 more tons of capital ships and 37,854 tons of aircraft carriers by the end of the year.

Italy, with 191 ships of 403,865 tons, is building 38 warships of 112,344 tons, including two capital ships, two light cruisers, 18 destroyers and 16 submarines. The Italians also have the right to convert 105,000 more tons into capital ships, and 60,000 tons into aircraft carriers before January 1.

Black Legion Hunt to Bring Pond Draining

Permission Asked of Ford Company After Finding of Workman's Body.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, July 24.—The mill pond near Pinckney, Mich., which yielded the body of a slain colored man probably will be drained, beginning Saturday, in a search for the bodies of possible additional victims of the Black Legion, prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea announced today.

McCrea said Wayne and Livingston County authorities were ready to order the work begun as soon as permission is received from the Ford Motor Co., owner of the property. Several sink holes in the marshy land around the pond may be dragged.

The prosecutor said both Dayton Dean, confessed Black Legion slayer, and James Roy Lorance, who is charged with participation in the "thrill slaying" of Silas Coleman, had declared "Col." Harvey Davis told them the night-riding band disposed of several bodies in the pond.

Five Charged in Slaying.

Davis is charged with Lorance and three others with shooting Coleman, colored hod carrier whose body was found in a swamp on the pond's borders in 1935, to provide "a little excitement" for a Black Legion drinking party.

"Davis told me the organization had disposed of several people in the sink holes there," Dean said today. "When Coleman ran into the swamp, we thought he had dropped into one of the holes."

Dean declared that two weeks before Charles A. Poole was shot to death in the roadside "execution" May 12 which brought exposure of the Black Legion, he and Davis had considered taking Poole's body to the swamp.

Admits Participation.

Dean has pleaded guilty to kidnaping and murdering Poole, and has admitted participation in the kidnaping and slaying of Coleman, whose body was found propped against a pole in the marsh.

"Another time Davis and me were talking about giving a guy a trimming," Dean said, "and he brought it up about the pond up at Pinckney again."

Dean explained that by "trimming" he meant that the victim was to have been taken on a "one-way ride like Coleman."

Mrs. Lucius J. Dowle, wife of the caretaker at the pond, told McCrea's investigators that parties of men from resort cottages at nearby Rush Lake came every week-end and rented boats, always at night, to go out on the pond.

Uncle Held in Co-ed's Death him at things like the faculty dances," remarked an associate.

"His habits were A-1," observed another. "We never heard of anything against him before. I know, for one, he helped out people who were in need. He was considerate, too, and I understand he was helping his niece through college."

Clevenger is a native of Shelby County, Ohio, where he was born on October 7, 1884. He went to public school there. He was graduated from Ohio State University, at Columbus, Ohio, in the class of 1906 with a bachelor of science degree.

In 1914 he studied and traveled in Europe. He first came to North Carolina to do work for the old Federal dairying set-up. He became a faculty member in 1923 and seven years later became a full-fledged professor.

Clevenger made many trips to all parts of the State in his extension work.

"Dairymen and others he came in contact with thought very highly of his work," said Dean I. O. Schaub, director of the Extension Service.

It was on one of his trips that he went to Asheville with his niece, who had been visiting in Raleigh on her first trip South.

Brother Also Professor.

He has a brother, C. B. Clevenger, also a professor at the college, whose wife is connected with the college library.

Before the announcement of Clevenger's arrest was made here today, the sheriff released Mark Wollner, 35-year-old German-born concert and radio violinist. He had previously been described by the officer as "my suspect No. 1."

"I no longer suspect Wollner of any direct connection with the crime," stated Brown, declining to discuss Wollner's release.

Wollner, whose estranged wife is in Washington on the faculty of the National Cathedral School for Girls, had a studio across the street from the hotel where the girl was slain. He had been held incommunicado since last Saturday night.

Wollner tonight asserted he intended to stay in Asheville and go ahead with his music.

"I told the sheriff," he stated, that if he wanted to keep me a year, and thought by doing so he could solve this horrible crime, then to keep me in jail.

"All I wanted was my violin."

Besides Clevenger, two employes at the hotel remained in custody tonight for further questioning. They are Daniel Gaddy, night watchman, and L. D. Roddy, colored elevator operator.

It was Prof. Clevenger who found his niece's outraged body sprawled in bloodstained pajamas in her room July 16, when, he said, he went to summon her for breakfast.

"I retired about 10:30 the night before," he testified at a coroner's inquest a week ago today.

"Helen and I had returned from a day in the country with friends about 10 o'clock. We said good night, and then we went to our rooms. I went right to bed.

Went to Her Room.

"The next morning I awoke at 7:30. I dressed and I shaved and then I went down the hall to Helen's room.

"I have always been careful about entering her room without knocking, and this time, as usual, I knocked.

"When she didn't answer, I rattled the door knob. The door swung open, and I saw her body lying half out of the bathroom door. Her face was horribly mutilated.

"I was stunned. I turned back into the hall. There I saw Mr. Lash, the house carpenter.

"'Look what they've done to her,'" I said.

"He looked in the door, then went to call the hotel management."

Miss Clevenger had been shot in the breast. Her face had been beaten and mutilated with a sharp instrument. Her body was clothed in bloodstained green pajamas. Under a radiator, officers found her room key, also bloodstained.

Pass Key Found.

A pass key of the type issued only to hotel employes was found in the door of her room. It still is one of the unsolved mysteries of the case.

In an effort to trace the key and find out more about a so-far unidentified man who was seen to dart through the hotel lobby and leap off the balcony shortly after the time fixed for the murder—1 a. m.—the sheriff has questioned 75 employes of the hotel.

Even today the sheriff reiterated he expected Gaddy, the night watchman, to talk.

"I want him to tell me something important," asserted Brown.

He added that, although he did not suspect him of the actual crime, Gaddy failed to punch his time clock in the corridor outside Miss Clevenger's room as scheduled at 1 a. m.

At a late hour tonight a member of the Clevenger family in New York, who requested that his name not be used, said the family was not "upset" at the arrest of the professor.

"We knew Prof. Clevenger would be detained," he was quoted as saying.

"That move was merely in line with routine investigation. We were not upset about it at all."

But no comment was forthcoming from J. F. Clevenger, father of the slain girl.

Following the rites in a little Ohio town, he remained locked in his home.

"He's gone to bed," a member of the household said over the telephone.

"He's gone to bed.

"He's just returned from Helen's funeral in Ohio.

"He's heartbroken. He cannot be disturbed."

5,000-Mile Flight To Hospital Ends

The last leg of a 5,000-mile jaunt by plane to receive treatment for a serious throat infection was reached last night by Bradford Washburn, youthful explorer, when a plane in which he had flown from Seattle landed at Boston Airport.

Washburn, youthful leader of a National Geographic exploring party to Mount McKinley, was rushed to a Boston hospital, an Associated Press dispatch from Boston said.

Washburn received severe oxygen burns to his throat while photographing Mount McKinley from the air.

He was rushed to Seattle from Alaska by plane, thence to Boston.

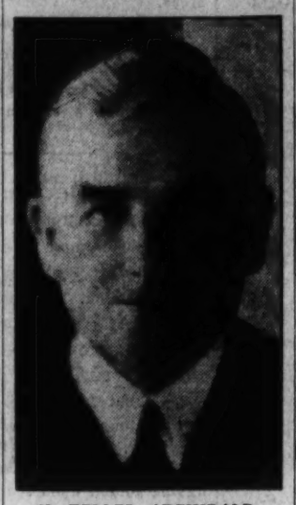
Sportsman Dies



N. TELLER ARCHIBALD.

N. T. Archibald Dies; Virginia Horse Breeder

Native of Washington Was on a Business Trip in Massachusetts.

Word was received here yesterday of the death in Swampscott, Mass., of N. Teller Archibald, 57, native Washingtonian, who started his career as a newspaperman and later became one of the most famous horse breeders in the United States.

Mr. Archibald died of a heart attack while on a business trip. He was in Massachusetts making plans for the running of the Massachusetts Handicap at Suffolk Downs on Wednesday.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb P. Archibald, he was born here on June 1, 1879. He attended the local schools, graduating from Washington High. He first worked with William Curtis on newspapers and shortly afterward became a member of the staff of the Chicago Record-Herald.

After several years of newspaper work, he left the work to organize a real estate development company in Chicago and in 1919 took over the Chicago branch of a candy company.

His rolling 1,500-acre estate, Archwood Manor, near The Plains, Va., is known as one of the best-equipped racing establishments in the United States. In addition to the horses bred there, the pastures of the manor contain some of the finest cattle in the South.

Mr. Archibald is survived by his widow, Mrs. Dorothy N. Archibald; a sister, Mrs. Albert Close, and three brothers, Willard, Albert and Clarence C. Archibald. Clarence is vice president and treasurer of a local confectionary concern.

The body, it was announced, will be brought to this city for burial, but funeral arrangements had not been completed last night.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Washington Summer Concerts Association presents the third "Symphony on the Potomac" at the Watergate Friday night with Alfred Wallenstein as guest conductor and Joseph Coleman as violin soloist. Program: Overture to "Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor" (Nicolai), Concerto in E minor for violin and orchestra (Mendelssohn), "Don Juan" (Richard Strauss), Nocturne and Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn), "Walkuerenritt" (Wagner).

Only the box-office count, and not the estimating eye, could have distinguished any difference in size between last night's audience and the one congregated at the Watergate on Wednesday. A pleasant program under a star-strewn sky in air refreshed by the afternoon shower did not entice a capacity attendance. There's no use in speculating about the reasons, for people go to concerts when and if they are in the mood. The goodly crowd present very evidently enjoyed the music and did not leave Mr. Wallenstein and the players in any doubt about their approval.

Those acquainted with all the light operas of Otto Nicolai tell us that "Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor" is his masterpiece, and since we never hear any portions of the others, we have to take their word for it. Whether he could have surpassed it, had he lived longer, no man can say, for he was stricken with apoplexy in his thirty-eighth year two months after the premiere of the work in Berlin. For that reason I always feel a tinge of sadness in the lively overture which is so justly popular.

Its contagious humor and high spirits testify to a genius comedic vein in Nicolai and explain the frequency of its appearance on concert programs. There must be engaging qualities in his other works as well, and one wonders at the persistence with which conductors avoid them. Perhaps some day we may hear the overture to "Der Templar" and "Die Heimkehr des Verbannen" just for a change.

"Since what is roughly known as time immemorial" (thank you, Frank Sullivan, for the phrase), it has been the custom for violinists, who wish to make a good first impression, to choose the Mendelssohn concerto. Joseph Coleman certainly won his point with a technically expert and poetically intoned performance, and Mr. Wallenstein abetted him with a nicely balanced reading of the orchestral part. Mr. Coleman knows his nuances and accents, and there was persuasive eloquence in his phrasing.

The orchestra was metaphorically on its toes for the Richard Strauss tone-poem, and the result was a stirring disclosure, effective both in its energy and its tenderness in the lyric episodes. The excerpts from Mendelssohn's incidental music for Shakespeare's fairy play were neatly done. In the "Ride of the Valkyrs," there were some good climaxes, but not to match the soaring in the Strauss number.

The amplifiers, so obstreperous on Wednesday night, had been tamed in the interim and were on their good behavior. There is still room for improvement, as some of the tones were rough edged in fortissimo.

Policeman Hurt By Strike Bomb At Rand Plant

Gov. Cross Gives Up Plan for Parley With Head of Typewriter Co.

By the United Press.

Hartford, Conn., July 24.—Violence flared anew at the Syracuse and Middletown branch plants of Remington-Rand, Inc., today as Gov. Wilbur L. Cross angrily gave up attempts to hold a peace parley with Governors of New York and Ohio, and with James H. Rand, jr., president of the strike-stricken company.

A Syracuse policeman was injured by the explosion of a bomb tossed from a speeding automobile, and five workers at Middletown were severely injured in the worst outbreak of violence there since the strike started two months ago. Cars were burned, stoned and overturned as destruction continued through the night and into the early hours of today.

Despite this, Gov. Cross threw up his hands at refusal of Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York to be present personally at the proposed powwow, and at Rand's unwillingness to enter into any discussion with Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio.

Said a statement from Cross' office:

"Gov. Cross finds it impossible to arrange the conference he desired to have next week with Gov. Lehman of New York, Gov. Davey of Ohio, Mr. James H. Rand, jr., and a representative of the strikers of Remington-Rand, Inc., as Gov. Lehman feels that it is the power and duty of his industrial commissioner, Mr. Elmer F. Andrews, to act in such a case, and as Mr. Rand is unwilling to meet with Gov. Davey.

"Accordingly, Gov. Cross must proceed in a different way in an effort to settle the strike."

Four men were arrested at Syracuse in connection with the bombing, while two others were given six-month jail sentences at Middletown for strike violence, a penalty meted out when Judge Leonard O. Ryan learned of the new disorders at the plant.

Camped In The Capitol.

The so-called "hunger marchers," who have invaded Pennsylvania's State capitol with demands for a $100,000,000 relief appropriation are emulating the tactics of the agitators who camped in the capitol at Trenton last spring. In both States the invaders have turned public buildings into combination eating, sleeping and general living quarters, in addition to using the assembly rooms for the staging of mock legislative sessions.

In Pennsylvania, as in New Jersey, partisan wrangling between the two houses of the Legislature has continued until relief funds have been exhausted. In New Jersey, the legislative deadlock persisted despite the clamor of the invading mob. Eventually the relief load had to be shifted to the local governmental units, where it is now said to be very efficiently handled. In Pennsylvania a compromise has been reached as to the total amount of relief money to be appropriated by the State, but the Democratic House and the Republican Senate cannot agree upon a program for raising the needed revenues.

There is said to be reason to suspect that the unemployed and the professional agitators who have taken up residence in the Pennsylvania capitol have received some encouragement from political sources. That was also alleged in New Jersey, where the Governor had been angered by the Legislature's repeal of the sales tax levied to finance relief outlays.

Regardless of the truth of these charges, tolerance of disorderly conduct, intended to coerce or frighten legislators into passing laws, is indefensible. There is a great difference between orderly exercise of the right to petition and actions obviously intended to embarrass or intimidate a legislative body. To yield to mob clamor, or even to appear to do so, creates a contempt for constituted authority that is a menace to governmental stability.

The disorders arising in the neighboring States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania emphasize the grave responsibilities that rest upon State Legislatures to discharge their obligations for taking care of the needy without permitting political rivalries to interfere with the acceptance of rational relief plans adapted to the capacity of the people to pay. And the experience of New Jersey further seems to indicate that the smaller the political unit in which responsibility for relief is centered, of course excepting the case of destitute communities, the more smoothly the problem is handled.

The New Drought Committee.

President Roosevelt has instructed the members of the newly created "Great Plains Drought Area Committee" to "carry on a study looking toward the most efficient utilization of the natural resources" of that territory. The mandate lays special stress upon "practicable measures for remedying the conditions which have brought widespread losses and distress to so many inhabitants of the Missouri, Platte and Arkansas valleys, the Panhandle of Texas and Oklahoma and contiguous areas."

There is great need of a comprehensive, long-range inquiry of this sort, but to be worth while it must be carried on by experts who approach their labors with an open mind and with a determination not to render preconceived judgments. This is not the kind of study suited to the capacities of a man like Dr. Tugwell, whose ambitious resettlement plans might themselves profitably be subjected to expert scrutiny.

It is especially difficult to understand why Mr. Hopkins should be made a member of a drought committee. His only qualification for this position apparently derives from his responsibility for finding relief jobs for drought sufferers. Moreover, if Dr. Tugwell and Mr. Hopkins are placed on the committee, why was Secretary Wallace passed over? He has a long-range drought relief program which he is already outlining in his public addresses.

These perplexities are less puzzling after reading the President's further instructions to his new committee. They are asked to give him the benefit of their views "some time in August," at a meeting to be held within the area. Probably the members know as much or as little about a long-range program for efficient utilization of land resources now as they will next month. They can, however, assemble a good deal of already available material and supply the President with data for a campaign speech to be delivered to inhabitants of the drought areas.

Perhaps that is all the committee is expected to do. At any rate that is about all it will have time to do, in spite of the great technical ability and other admirable qualities of its chairman, Dr. Morris L. Cooke.

Belated Devotion To Merit.

If President Roosevelt's executive order on the appointment of postmasters is to be judged by practical results during his own Administration, its effectiveness will be somewhat less than 10 per cent. Theoretically 13,730 first, second and third class postoffices fall within the terms of the order. But fewer than 1,200 postmasters in this group remain to be appointed. Consequently, this belated move to extend the merit system creates an impression that, having gorged upon spoils, the Administration is chiefly interested in claiming credit for reforms on the eve of the election.

There is much that is commendable in the President's order. For example, it requires that when open competitive examinations are held to fill vacancies in first, second and third class postmasterships, the highest eligible applicant must be recommended to the President for appointment. This rule is a step in advance of the ordinary procedure in making civil service appointments, which permits a choice among the three highest applicants.

Any move to free the Postoffice Department from the grip of the spoilsmen deserves approval. Both parties have used this organization, which should be operated entirely upon a business basis, as a tool for partisan purposes. Congress has repeatedly refused to pass corrective legislation because its members have not been willing to surrender the patronage involved. In spite of the circumstances under which it has been issued, therefore, the President's order may have far-reaching beneficial results.

It would be a mistake, however, to regard this move as a complete victory for the merit system. Even if new postmasters of the first, second and third class are chosen through competitive examinations their terms will extend for only four years, and their nominations will be subject to confirmation by the Senate. The President could not change these requirements of the law by executive order. Consequently, permanence of tenure will be lacking, and that fact may discourage the most competent executives from taking the examinations. Or the Senate may still insist that only members of the majority party be appointed.

The order also carefully provides for reappointment of postmasters who owe their positions to Farleyism, on condition that they pass special non-competitive examinations. As a result, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee will be able to keep many of his favorites in strategic postal jobs so long as he remains Postmaster General. The public can scarcely be expected to overlook the deep irony of the President's move in the direction of the merit system while the chief dispenser of spoils remains head of the Postoffice Department.

In view of the fact that this measure of reform follows close upon Gov. Landon's proposal to place the entire Potoffice Department under civil service, the Kansan has expressed pleasure that "such a good start" has been made As he intimates, however, the real test of the Administration's sudden conversion to the merit system will come when and if it moves to eliminate politics from the relief of unemployment.

Lindbergh's Warning.

Men of science seldom have to face the ultimate consequences of their findings. Pioneers are usually dead before the fruits of their endeavors become potent influences upon mankind. Yet some of the men who only a few years ago were struggling to make the airplane a really important agency of transportation are already deeply concerned lest it serve "to destroy the very things we wish to protect."

This ominous view of modern air fleets which menace the homes of the people and "every institution which we value most" is the more impressive because it was presented to high officials of the German Air Ministry by Charles A. Lindbergh. Armies, he says, can no longer "protect our families." Especially in Europe, the air fleets of the great powers could inflict irreparable damage within a few hours. In view of the feverish haste with which Germany is developing one of the most powerful winged military organizations in the world, this famous aviator could not possibly have chosen a more appropriate setting for his warning.

Lindbergh's appeal for a "new type of security . . . which rests in intelligence, not in forts" was even more impressive than his warning of impending dangers. "We who are in aviation carry a heavy responsibility on our shoulders," he said, "for while we have been drawing the world closer together in peace we have stripped the armor of every nation in war . . . The education which is necessary in aviation must also teach the value of civilized institutions."

It is not so easy, however, to accept the speaker's optimistic conclusion that "we have allied this force with intelligence" and that "we have moved power further away from ignorance." In Germany and in many other countries it is all too evident that stupendous forces of destruction are in the hands of groups that seem to have no conception of their responsibility for the preservation of peace. Indeed, it is this combination of irresponsibility with control over terrible machines of war which make Lindbergh's well-weighed words so appallingly significant.

Catching Up With Coughlin.

Charles E. Coughlin's grudging apology for having called the President a "liar" indicates a belated recognition that he has overstepped all bounds of decency in his recent posturings. But this gesture toward recantation carries no suggestion that the radio priest will voluntarily curtail his demagoguery. Rather it seems to be an attempt to soften the mounting indignation of his ecclesiastical superiors.

Certainly Coughlin did not announce the withdrawal of his insulting epithet until Bishop Michael J. Gallagher was well on his way to Rome, presumably to discuss the activities of the rabble-rousing orator with Pope Pius. He must have known, also, that his tirade at the Townsend convention had caused a "painful impression" at the Vatican. Fear of salutary discipline, rather than any awakening to a sense of his responsibilities, appears to account for Coughlin's small measure of retreat from the role of a political brawler.

Members of the Catholic Church in all parts of the country will doubtless welcome the scheduled conference between the Pope and Bishop Gallagher. For Coughlin's tactics are becoming a source of no small embarrassment among thinking people of every creed. And there seems little hope that this politically minded cleric will voluntarily come to realize the utter incompatibility of his priestly office and his performances upon the stump.

The desirability of the tradition which encourages a large measure of freedom among Catholic priests in the promotion of civic and moral objectives is obvious. Always, however, such advantages are associated with the exercise of discretion on the part of the individuals concerned. When discretion is lacking, the church may be seriously embarrassed by the reckless talk and activities of irresponsible representatives. It is but natural to expect a religious institution to protect itself against an underling who publicly denounces the Chief Executive of his country as a "liar."

Coughlin himself has given a key to the situation by admitting: "My usefulness as an American citizen is so interwoven with the morality of my priesthood that should I become a disobedient and recalcitrant priest I would render myself entirely useless." This statement indicates that he has consciously used not merely his influence as a citizen, but also his prestige as a priest, to prosecute his campaign of scurrility. Such unprincipled conduct can not long be tolerated by those who hold the priestly office in the respect which it deserves.

For Sports' Sake.

It must have been quite a spray that backstroker Eleanor Holm Jarrett kicked up to stir officials into dismissing her from the United States Olympic team. Champions' idiosyncracies are always difficult to condemn, the more so when sternness involves booking a special ocean passage home, to say nothing of throwing away an almost certain Olympic victory. But it is scarcely adequate exculpation of the unhappy incident to explain that the toothsome young Olympienne was carried away by the fast-growing maritime tradition which makes deep drinking an integral part of the sea voyage for light-minded passengers.

Regardless of explanation, the Olympic committee, having given fair warning, acted in the only way possible to sustain discipline. Even though Mrs. Jarrett protested that high living has never affected her swimming prowess, her nonchalant disregard for all orthodox training rules could not have helped the morale of her 300-odd shipmates, accustomed to more Spartan regimens.

Nevertheless, the incident will tend to reinforce doubts among those who are beginning to suspect that amateur sports, especially in championship brackets, are scarcely worth the professional effort and heavy expense they have come to require. Mrs. Jarrett herself has hinted at this. Said she shortly before sailing last week: "If I can't swim and have fun, then somebody else can do my swimming for me." While no excuse for carousing, there is much sense in those words. Sports for sports' sake, not as an exacting business, should be the motto posted in every locker room.

I have an idea and no money. Have interesting proposition for person who has money and no idea.—Classified ad. Have you any sort of proposition for a person who has neither?

A New Poker Deal.

From The Newark Evening News.

The suggestion comes from the town whence Harvard sends out her graduates. It was made at a youth guidance school by an assistant educational director of the First Corps Area of Boston. The recommendation was that poker be used as a means of enlisting the interest of idle boys in Civilian Conservation camps.

This is certainly one of the most novel suggestions that has yet come from the New Deal. We are told that the New Deal will provide everything from fresh-air outings up, if given support and encouragement. But since when was it necessary to give any one instruction in the great American game of draw poker? And then, too, what are the unemployed to use for money? Poker without stakes, is a dreary pastime, as all devotees of the game can testify. Is Uncle Samuel to furnish the wherewithal along with the pasteboards?

Big City.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A young lady from Montana arrived recently in New York City. Expenses from her home in Choteau (population, 1,200, and for a week in the city are her reward for a best essay describing Manhattan unseen. Until now, her biggest experience had been the Rocky Mountain earthquake of last autumn. But she is counting on the stores of Fifth avenue, Ellis Island, Radio City, Chinatown, the Cornell Medical Center and the New York Public Library soon to supersede that.

"I long to experience it (New York) for myself," her essay read in part, "soaking in its essence . . ." May her wish be granted. May she visit the Fifth avenue shops and all the rest. But if she is sincere in her desire to taste the city's essence, she must go further in her sight-seeing, the more so because she admits her mental picture of New York was drawn from the too rich words of Walt Whitman and Edith Wharton. She must look behind the bright lights. For in the tin of their reflectors and there alone will be mirrored the reality she seeks—the calculating smiles, the treadmill monotony, the rude disinterest, the bawling noise, the grit, the rush, the fever of the place.

Then when she returns to Montana to begin teaching school, as she plans, she will know New York—or any other big city, for that matter.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On behalf of the Washington Erasmus Committee I want to thank you for the co-operation which your paper has given us in the accomplishment of our plans.

In particular may I mention the splendid column by The Post Impressionist on July 4, the editorial on Sunday, July 12, and the generous space allotted to the resume of the ceremonies at the Washington Cathedral which appeared on Monday, July 13.

Two Views Of Gov. Landon.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Federal Government has sent to Kansas since March, 1933, after deducting income taxes paid by Kansas, more than one-third of a billion dollars. This immense sum went to relieve the 64,000 unemployed, loans to refinance owners of city and farm property, grants to municipalities, to banks, etc.

According to the New York Times, the net deficit of the Roosevelt Administration is slightly in excess of ten billion. Therefore, Kansas during the same period under the leadership of Gov. Landon is responsible for one-third of a billion of the net deficit.

I make this preliminary statement before replying to a recent letter to The Post from a Mr. Smith in which he implied that the Federal Government was penalizing Kansas, because its Governor is Republican nominee for Presidency. Mr. Smith commented on a recent allocation of a small sum for Kansas—reciting that sister States received more money. Mr. Smith failed to say that the allotment was made on a basis of need to drought States. Fortunately, at the time of the allotment Kansas had not been hit as hard as the sister States.

Before the drought came this year, Kansas harvested a normal wheat crop of 130,000,000 bushels—and due largely to the farm policies of this Administration a price of about $1 per bushel is being paid. Oats, barley, forage crops, garden truck had a fair yield in the Sunflower State, so the need for relief to drought stricken farmers was not acute. However, as the heat wave continued the corn farmers in Landon's State needed help and recently another allotment of funds was made.

Mr. Smith was needlessly alarmed. Had Kansas been slighted, Gov. Landon would have come a-runnin' all out of breath for Federal aid just as he has many times in the past. During the 1934 drought he came to Washington and secured $250,000 to help lay the dust in the dust bowl. And if there ever was a case of boondoggling with Federal funds, the dust project of the Kansas Chief Executive stands out as "Exhibit No. 1." This money was used to plow furrows at certain angles on dust bowl land on the theory the furrows would act as barriers against blowing dust—but farmers in western Kansas say it had an opposite effect—the plowed furrows stirred up more dust.

As a native Kansan, a resident of the beautiful little city of Independence, Kans., for 40 years—and one who knows Gov. Landon and his policies, permit me to assure Mr. Smith that as long as Gov. Landon is Governor, Kansas will always get its share of Federal aid.

For that's how budgets are balanced!

THURMAN HILL.
Independence, Kans., July 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. O'Donnell appears very much disturbed by the voters turning their backs on Roosevelt, as shown by the straw vote conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion. Our friend is evidently laboring under considerable misapprehension and mental confusion when he labels the anti-Roosevelt voter as an ingrate.

By way of explanation, allow me to state several reasons why the voters are going to repudiate Roosevelt at the polls in November. In the first place, the President upon numerous occasions has himself demonstrated his own insincerity. He promised the voters in 1932 a plan to alleviate the depression. Without any reason or justification he set forth upon an entirely different plan, in fact the very opposite from that which he promised, after he became President. He tried to make a football out of the Constitution after he swore to uphold, protect, and preserve the supreme law of the land. He has repudiated his own words, his own pledges; yes, even his own oath. Can anyone who is familiar with this record wonder why the American people are losing confidence in the man himself?

While the count of trust and confidence in the President as a man is in itself sufficient to justify a walk-out of all good citizens, the Administration is equally at a loss to justify its un-American policies. Where are the achievements, Mr. O'Donnell? We have a highly regimented bureaucratic Government which does not know the meaning of governmental economy. We have a system which is rapidly destroying the Federal system of government and especially the fundamental principle of local self-government. We have witnessed many unconstitutional acts outlawed by the Supreme Court; we have seen other wasteful projects meet the test of practicality and fail.

The philosophy of the New Deal is characterized by destroying private initiative and enterprise. That same philosophy contains the embryo of class strife. People are taught to spend their way out of debt and let the Government take care of all rainy days. Many people are rapidly losing all inclinations to make their own livings. The slogan to "soak the rich" has already brought forth extended hands holding tin cups. The Treasury has become the grabbag for the inside politicians.

Voters are turning to Landon to escape Roosevelt's insincerity, his dictatorial policies, and his philosophy of government.

Replies To 'A. Christian.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter signed by "A. Christian" in The Post of July 22, leads me to believe he is dissatisfied with conditions in America. If so, let him take a trip into some foreign country, as the writer has, and he will return to kiss the Statue of Liberty on both cheeks and never a peep will one hear from him again about "exploitation of labor" and "stolen wealth."

When one goes over this Nation, as he suggests, "with eyes and ears open," one sees the roads glutted with new autos going at breakneck speed and hears their horns honking in idiotic fashion.

Farmers, office and factory employes and all are free today to do their own thinking, but the trouble with them is that they fail to think and use judgment in their mode of living and expenditure of money—unlike their parents before them. Economy and thrift have been tossed aside by them, hence their dissatisfaction with life.

If one has a happy home, with three square meals a day, good health, a radio, a car of some kind, and good books to read, one has blessings for which one should most certainly be thankful and should desist from coveting his neighbors' oxen and asses, as does "A. Christian."

MARGARET L. WHIPPLER.
Arlington, Va., July 23.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to the wail in your columns of July 22 by one who has not honestly signed his own name, but uses "A. Christian," let me suggest that if he thinks the only way that a fine home, a fine auto, a fine yacht and other luxuries can be gotten is dishonestly, that he turn dishonest and try it and see how long he can keep out of jail. That is certainly a Pharisee, and not Christian, attitude to take.

For myself, I do not believe that there is anything dishonest about Henry Ford taking the prices he gets for his autos, about Lindbergh taking the "prizes" he has, about Joe Louis and Schmeling being entitled to all they got as far as those who paid the price of admission is concerned, and I don't see it is anybody's else business. My suggestion to "A. Christian" is that he play our game as it is played in the good old American way that has meant, and still means, if we can get rid of all this New Deal foolishness, more of the good things of life.

Rock Creek Washing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Up until reading the letter on your editorial page from Mr. Charles Gross about debris in Rock Creek Park, I had assumed that no one was interested in either the looks of the park or what goes on there.

I had assumed that this beautiful park was an outdoor garage for the automobile washing industry.

You can go out there almost any Sunday afternoon along the road that skirts the creek and get some of the most delightful scenic pictures that you have ever printed in your rotogravure section.

With a background of still reflecting waters with ducks and geese paddling idly about you will find women in Mother Hubbards or nightgowns, I wouldn't know which, washing automobiles aided by, I presume, their husbands stripped to the shirt and less.

The dirty water is then thrown back into the creek above the ducks and geese for them to swim in.

This astonishing situation in the most beautiful park in the center of any city in the world is something to write home about.

The United States Government has spent thousands of dollars in the last two or three years beautifying this park, including the restoration of the beautiful Old Mill and less than 200 yards above this mill you will find people throwing soap-suds into the creek to go over the beautiful wheel.

Where are the park police on this?

The Post Impressionist

"In The Sweat Of Thy Face."

Post Office, Saturday.

THERE is a little lesson in an obscure piece of gossip from Hollywood. In fact, the gossip is far from being essentially obscure. It is treated obscurely by the newspapers for the reason that it mentions the names of no motion-picture celebrities. Really, it is self illuminating. It says that many players who "get to the Coast" never get so far as their talents ought to take them.

Because of unfair discrimination on the part of directors? Contrary to popular superstition—no. These aspirants quit the cinema—"because it's too hard work."

This strikes the Post-Impressionist as touching all the screen-enthusiasts of all the world.

The term "screen-enthusiasts"—as applied to people outside the art-industry—may be said, somewhat less than roughly, to include 100 per cent of civilized mankind, 25 per cent of uncivilized mankind and pretty much all that portion of the race which is in the laborious process of acquiring civilization. Moreover, these screen-enthusiasts are rigidly divided into two classes: the infinite majority, who are enthusiastic for the screen; and the small, but clamorous, minority who are enthusiastic against it.

So far as the matter in hand is concerned, the former do more harm to the cinema than the latter.

And the producers and players, though in a negative and innocently-intentioned way, do more harm to the cinema than either class of the "screen enthusiasts."

If the work of motion picture acting is too hard for those beginners who "get to the Coast," the actors who survive must, quite simply, be extremely hard workers—for every star must have been a beginner. Also, if the job is gruelling for the boy or girl who fills a minor role, it must be many times more gruelling for the man or woman who stars.

But who, among the millions of screen enthusiasts, ever hears of that? It is sedulously concealed in such obscure news items as the one we summarized.

For an obvious reason:

The screen enthusiasts—pro and anti, but especially the antis—want to think (Heaven alone knows why!) that the task of the cinema-player is indeed play. The producer and the players let the players' press-agents supply this demand. Then the multitude of unofficial "movie magazines" oversupply it.

Equally obvious is the unfortunate effect:

The world-wide acceptance of the idea that Hollywood genius is a reversal of Carlyle's definition of genius, "an infinite capacity for taking pains"—that Hollywood life is not much more than a life of luxury—that it is an idle life. And we all know what kind of work Satan finds "for idle hands to do."

Even allowing that there is about as much naughtiness among cinema folk as there is in any other class of always frail humanity—allowing that there are almost as many divorces among motion-picture players as there are among members of the Stock Exchange—the sort of press-agenting above sketched is responsible for the popular misconception concerning "Screen Morals"—whereby we mean, not the morals of the screen drama, but the private morals of the people who present it.

Of course, psychologically considered, there is more of an aesthetic than a moral significance in the fact that the average screen-player permits his press-agent to create the all-play-and-no-work idea. The permission indicates that, at least so far as the players are concerned, the motion picture is rather an art than an industry. For, however true Carlyle's definition, the most painstaking talent usually tries to give the impression that its productions are effortless.

Horace and Gray were among the few poets, Flaubert and de Maupassant among the few novelists, who would admit to arduous labor. Only a Michelangelo—when a customer complained that he charged too much for a rapid sketch—could admit: "It took me 30 years to learn how to do it in five minutes." Byron swore that he "dashed off" his best verse in final form, albeit his heavily corrected manuscripts belied him—and Byron was typical. Most artists confuse facility with genius: so, the harder they find their work, the lighter they pretend to find it.

But, for the cinema, this course is, demonstrably, folly. What though the public wants to think that the players are mere wasters? It can be made to like the thought that they aren't; it can be made to see the Romance of Taking Pains.

The industry—the art—of the motion picture is succeeding in censoring its own productions—has succeeded in censoring the advertising of those productions. Its next step should be the devising of a code for the individual press-agents of its separate stars; a code that will once and for all ban the banal myth which presents the hard highway of the screen as an easy shortcut to a non-existent lotus land.

Fair Enough

Yankee Sin.

Manchester, N. H.

Salem, N. H., less than an hour's drive from here, is the place where the needle went in which planted the gambling virus in the New England temperament and set the mill hands and the honest New Hampshire hay-shakers to talking the hoodlums' jargon about the morning line, past performances and long shots.

Salem, on the New Hampshire side of the Massachusetts border, is the site of Rockingham Park, a race track built on a long chance by John W. Gates, the plunger, in 1906. In its first season Rockingham offered free admission, free meals and free drinks to the customers, but seldom drew more than a couple of hundred and folded up before the pious fury of a minister named Chalmers, who made a personal crusade against the forces of evil invading a God-fearing community to lure the innocent to perdition. After that Rockingham Park went to weeds and ruin until 1916, when the place was used for a cavalry training school, and after the war the weeds and ruin moved in again to rebuke the foul intentions of the New York slicker.

• • • •

But hard times are hard on the morals, and when a few years ago the State of New Hampshire found itself in urgent need of cash money the tempter showed up again. He came to New Hampshire offering a percentage of the pari-mutuel receipts, a market for the honest hayshakers' hay and seasonal employment for a small number of New Hampshire boys in the service of Satan as tellers, hostlers and ticket takers.

In this difficult situation the New Hampshire Legislature faltered and fell, passing a law to permit the doing of the Devil's work at Salem provided the Devil kicked back 3½ per cent of the gross and other taxes and favored the local boys in the selections of his helpers.

Satan laughed and laughed, for honesty is not in him, and all the time he had a hidden intention to poison the soul of New England with the gambling habit. The customers came a-running from Manchester, Nashua and Exeter; from Boston, Haverhill, Lawrence and Lowell, and even from Providence. And so the evil spread, until at present there are horse parks operating in Massachusetts and Rhode Island and racing goes on almost continuously from the second of May until snowfall in November. In Massachusetts the Legislature went even further and legalized dog racing, which has at least this much, if not more, in common with burglary and prostitution—that it prefers to operate at night.

That was what the Devil wanted all the time. He wasn't fixing to capture the right-living Yankees of New Hampshire and be content with the tragedy of that. He reckoned that sin cannot be quarantined and that, given a taste of that which the godless, in their folly, are pleased to call high life, the Yankees of Massachusetts and Rhode Island would set up a clamor for racing in their own communities.

Soon after Rockingham Park reopened there appeared in New England a crew of sinister characters from Broadway, New York, who dressed in fancy clothes, played golf like stylish millionaires and posed as sportsmen. The truth was, of course, that they were conducting machinations in secret, and they may be machinating still, although it appears that other sinister characters sprang to life in Boston and ran them out of the territory which they had pioneered. The machinations are now said to be largely in the hands of the sinister Bostonians not only at the Massachusetts tracks, both horse and dog, but at Narragansett, in Rhode Island, too. Nobody bothers to machinate much at Rockingham any more. The Boston and Providence horse parks are the big stores, and Rockingham receives just enough racing dates to keep the franchise alive. New Hampshire has been cast aside like a trusting girl who became a rich man's plaything or an old shoe.

There are signs that the New Hampshire Yankees are disenchanted now. For a while there in the stores it was all a body could do to buy a new hay rake or a spool of thread, the clerks were so engrossed in talk of odds and relections. But all is not gold that glitters, as the copybook so truly said, and the gambling has abated to a great extent. The people didn't win as much as they lost—a common experience. The State's percentage, the price of an old virtue which has glittered like a bright star in the crown of New Hampshire's puritan character, has been curtailed by the competition of the other tracks. The honest hayshakers have sold less hay then they expected to, and the employment promised the local talent has been unimportant.

But in Massachusetts and Rhode Island the new vice is raging in the soul of the Yankee, and there is agitation now for racing in Connecticut. New Hampshire, the first to be seduced, is a faded beauty in the eyes of the tempter and thinking of repentance. But her worst sin was in the example she set when she flaunted the feather boas and high-heeled shoes received from the horse-park business and tempted the neighbors' children into a life of shame.

The League 'Failure'

Critics Of Geneva's Treatment Of Ethiopian Problem Warned To Differentiate Between League Policies And Members' Actions.

The following article, by a professor of political science at Bryn Mawr College, is reprinted in slightly excerpted form from the July issue of the American Journal of International Law.

By Charles G. Fenwick.

THE SUCCESS of the Italian campaign in Ethiopia in the face of the public condemnation of Italy by the League of Nations as an aggressor, and in spite of the economic sanctions applied by the League, limited as they were, has led to a quite general reaction on the part of public opinion in the United States to the League as being a "failure."

On the part of those who believe in the principle of collective security as applied to international relations, the confession of the failure of the League has been naturally a regretful one. For others not so disposed toward schemes of cooperative defense, the pronouncement of failure has been the occasion for cheering, as if an institution which of its nature could not effectively guarantee the peace had now been shown definitely to be what it was.

In both cases, though far more so in the latter, there has been a tendency to confuse principles of law with the circumstances attending the application, to identify the League system with policies of the states whose voices were more dominant in its councils, and to give to the League a corporate character which it has never from the beginning possessed.

Technically, of course, the "failure of the League" is the failure of the plan of collective security embodied in Articles 10, 11 and 16 of the Covenant.

League Reorganization Presents First Problem.

THE POLITICAL aspects of the failure of the League in the Italo-Ethiopian crisis are sufficiently obvious. What students of international law are more concerned with is the problem of the reorganization of the present system of collective security so as to meet, if possible, the demands of the next situation. For there can be no question that collective security must continue to be the ultimate objective of international organization if international law is to be an effective agency for the maintenance of peace in an ordered world.

The particular form which collective security may take, whether regional or universal, whether put into effect by limited or by general treaties, is a matter of practical expediency. The principle of law which must remain dominant is the principle that the collective judgment of the community of nations must replace the right of each state to be the judge in its own case and the collective power of the community be substituted for the old right of the individual state to take the law into its own hands.

It is said "the world is not yet ready for such ideals," that the political dangers involved in such forms of international co-operation under present conditions make it desirable to postpone plans of cooperative security until there is greater promise of their success, that if the collective organization goes too far in advance of the standards of conduct of the individual members of the group, new sources of friction will be created that will but add to the difficulty of settling existing disputes.

These are, of course, practical considerations which can not be lightly dismissed. They may force us to slow down the pace with which we pursue the objective of collective security, but they must not be allowed to change the direction of our purpose.

Accepting the principle of collective security as the ultimate, if at present unattained, goal of international law, there are several forms of reorganization which might be applied to the League in order to make it a more effective agency of peace. One series of proposals, to which perhaps most serious consideration has been given, would convert the existing organization of collective security into a regional rather than a world-wide system. Groups of nations would bind themselves, after the manner of the Locarno treaties, to maintain collective security within their limited circle.

Of such character, for example, was the proposal made by Sir Samuel Hoare on June 9 and by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Neville Chamberlain, on June 10. In neither case, however, was there any such specification of details as would permit comment on the proposal as a legal proposition.

League Lacks Strength To Subdue Nationalism.

THE VARIOUS proposals of regional reorganization, however, do not appear to go to the root of the difficulties brought into clearer light by the Italo-Ethopian situation. It is clear now, as it was not in 1920, that a League which is "nothing but the governments represented in the Council and in the Assembly," as Lord Robert Cecil once described it, has not sufficient corporate unity to overcome the conflicts of nationalistic interest within the dominant group of the Great Powers. In a loose confederation which can only act with the unanimous consent of the individual governments, the failure of the leading members of the confederation to agree is likely of itself to be fatal; and this probability is all the greater when important states are outside the confederation and can not be counted upon to support such limited measures as the divergent policies of the leading members may agree to.

In what practical ways might greater corporate unity be given to the League? Is it possible to secure a representation of "peoples" instead of a representation of governments, taking "peoples" as meaning the sum of the various groups within a particular state with their separate sets of interests and their separate organization apart from that of the state as a whole.

It is a familiar observation that there are within the national boundaries of the individual states groups of persons organized in accordance with their religious, social or economic objects, whose interests are almost identical with those of similar groups in neighboring states. At present the organization of the League of Nations, in so far as it relates to action in the direction of collective security, makes no provision for the representation of such groups, although such representation might be greatly effective in cutting across national lines and creating that body of common international interests necessary to give to the League the greater corporate unity which it needs.

The artificiality of the mere representation of governments is well illustrated by the change in the policy of the French government following the elections of last May. Had those elections taken place six months earlier, it is probable that Great Britain and France would have found it possible to pursue a more effective policy in the matter of sanctions directed against Italy. Here was no more than a change in the agency of government, but it indicated that the voice that spoke in the name of France in December, 1935, or in February, 1936, was very doubtfully the voice of a majority of the French people.

Small Regional Groups Suggested As Solution.

WHETHER the representation at Geneva of local "interest groups" as distinct from the more rigidly organized state of which they are a part would facilitate the solution of the vitally important economic problem of the redistribution of raw materials and the opening of markets, is a question that could only be answered experimentally. There is nothing to suggest that it would hinder it, and much to suggest that it would facilitate it. For the interactions of political and economic nationalism are very close, and anything that might tend to moderate the one would be likely to have a corresponding effect upon the other.

Does the existence of dictatorships in a number of the leading countries preclude for the time being any consideration of a reorganization of the League along lines similar to those suggested above? It would seem to do so, at least, in respect to the states that are under the dictatorship. For where there is no freedom of speech or of the press or of assembly there is little reason to expect that "interest groups" would advocate policies different from those of the government of their national state, or that they could be counted upon to reflect in any degree the sentiment of a corresponding part of the population of the state.

But dictatorships present a problem which must embrass any form of international organization; and when accompanied by the extreme nationalalism which usually goes with them, they constitute a standing obstacle to the development of greater solidarity in the community of nations.

The need, however, of a new approach in international relations is so urgent that the first steps in reorganization may have to be taken in the hope that the obstacle presented by dictatorships may prove to be less formidable than it seems.

Plight Of A Townsendite

I'd like two hundred every month—
'Twould give me great delight,
But can I get it voting as A Smithcoughtownsendite?

Just fifty per would do for me,
And help my kin and kith . . .
But are my chances good if I
Become a Towncoughsmith?

Two hundred smackers, ah, how nice!
An income sweet and fat . . .
But will I ever get it as A Smithtowncoughercrat?

Just seven bucks a day, I feel,
Would be just right, oh, man!
But, gosh! I feel quite doubtful as A Coughlempksmithoclan.

I started with one aim in mind,
One leader and one plan,
But now I have more leaders than
Are good for any man.

A pension in my later days
Was all that filled my dreams . . .
Lord, how did I get all mixed up
With all those other schemes?

Doc Townsend was my boss and chief—
I followed and was proud . . .
But where my one lone leader stood
I now perceive a crowd!

There's Rector Smith who'd share the wealth
And in the growing jam
There's Lemke and there's Father Charles—
Oh, tell me where I am!

Will some one kindly answer me,
And then I shall desist:
Am I a simple Townsendite
Or Coughlempksmitholist?

Yoo Hoo, Mr. Hoover!

Accent On Ber

By William Lyon Phelps.

G. B. Shaw.

Tomorrow, Sunday, July 26, George Bernard Shaw will be 80 years old, as he was born in Dublin, July 26, 1856. The world is celebrating this event.

Last June, 1935, I sat next him at a lunch party in London. Physically he is almost as remarkable as he is mentally. There is truly not the slightest sign of age about him anywhere except his copious snow-white hair and beard. He is over 6 feet, he has the figure of an undergraduate, he is so buoyantly healthy that he seems to skip rather than to walk; his motions are agile, easy, swift, and graceful; his eyesight and hearing are perfect, and his mind as alert in conversation as that of a man of 30.

• • • •

He has never eaten meat, or taken a drink, or a smoke, and I believe that the only time he ever wore evening clothes was to please Charlie Chaplin.

The reason why he never drank any alcohol he tells himself in his letters to Ellen Terry, which were published a few years ago. It was a good reason.

Entirely apart from Shaw's attitude in politics, religion, sociology, etc. (and if I understand his position in these matters, I do not at all agree with it) no one can meet Shaw personally without being impressed instantly by two things. He seems the happiest man in the world, overflowing with laughter, good-nature, and high spirits. Second, even the most casual acquaintance feels his extraordinary kindness. He is kind; he is more than amiable; he is positively benevolent in his attitude to individuals. His acts of unselfish kindness are innumerable. As someone has said, "Shaw talks a great deal about how much money he makes, but he never mentions the money he gives away." And one of the leading men of letters in England told me that if he were ever in trouble or in difficulty of any kind, the first friend he would go to would be Bernard Shaw.

• • • •

One day some years ago I was talking with the distinguished writer, the late Cunninghame-Graham. He said, "In all that is written or said about Mr. Shaw, the thing that should be most emphasized is his personal kindness."

May I remind my readers that his name Bernard is accented strongly on the first syllable, and not on the second?

Alaska Plane Rushes Doctor, Nurses to Battle Typhoid Peril

Bristol Bay Villages Report Outbreak Nearing Epidemic Proportions; 14 Seriously Ill at Dillingham; Skall Hospital Crowded.

By the Associated Press.

Juneau, Alaska, July 24.—Another northland "mercy fight" was begun today when Pilot Joseph Sheldon took off with a physician, three trained nurses and serum for Bristol Bay, where a serious outbreak of typhoid fever, described as near-epidemic proportions, was reported.

The epidemic reports, made to Gov. John W. Troy's office by radio, said there were 14 serious cases at Dillingham and numerous minor ones. No reports had been received from other Eskimo villages bordering Bristol Bay.

Sheldon apparently planned a nonstop flight over the 725 miles across the bleak north Pacific and portions of the Bering Sea.

In the plane were Territorial Sanitary Engineer Dr. Benjamin L. Grimes and Nurses Mae Riebette, Thelma Shiriver and M. Oygard.

Reports to the Governor's office said the epidemic was raging at Dillingham, Snag Point, Nushagak and other trading and fishing outposts.

R. Swartz, a representative of the fishermen's union at Nushagak, radioed the Bureau of Fisheries that the Skall Hospital there was crowded and the staff overworked. He said physicians, medicines and equipment were badly needed. Unusual hot weather was adding to the distress.

Nushagak, largest of the villages, is a trading post and postoffice. About a mile north is Kanulik, a Moravian mission.

The entire Bristol Bay region is the leading salmon area in the territory.

WPA Dismisses 7 For Asserted Political Acts

Williams Terms Landon Criticism an Obvious Partisan Charge.

By the Associated Press.

Dismissing seven WPA employes in Oklahoma for asserted political activity, Aubrey Williams, Deputy WPA Administrator, simultaneously asserted yesterday the only way to reduce relief costs would be to "cut people off and let them starve."

At a press conference Williams said criticism of WPA administrative costs by Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, was obviously a political charge." He added he was "proud" that the Administration's overhead had been held to less than 4 per cent of total outlays.

Williams called a special press conference to hear his telegram to W. S. Key, Oklahoma WPA administrator, dismissing the seven employes.

Drought Relief Widened.

He added Kansas and Nebraska to the list of States receiving extra WPA money for drought relief.

His telegram said the seven dismissed employes, "upon incontestable evidence," had been found guilty of political activities in Oklahoma's recent primary campaign.

Declining to specify which candidates the dismissed employes had sought to help, Williams said "most" were supporters of Josh Lee, who ran first in the primary for the Democratic Senatorial nomination.

Gov. E. W. Marland, who ran second, will oppose Lee in a run-off primary next Tuesday, and Williams said he was making public the dismissals "at this particular time" in order that "substantial justice" may be done.

Activities Set Forth.

Williams said some of the seven dismissed had sought to collect campaign contributions, distribute candidates' literature and perform other political acitvities not only among the WPA administrative staff, but the needy persons on projects.

He added this was the first time proof was submitted of attempts to influence votes of those taken from relief rolls.

He said he was "satisfied with Key's efforts to keep the Oklahoma WPA out of politics."

Williams said he had authorized employment of additional WPA workers in drought areas of Kentucky, but he did not reveal the number authorized.

King Edward Will Visit French Battleground

London, July 24 (AP).—King Edward VIII will make his first visit abroad since his accession when he embarks tomorrow on the British admiralty yacht Enchantress for France to dedicate the Canadian National War Memorial at Vimy Ridge.

The King's plans for a summer holiday on the French Riviera, however, still were unsettled.

He will return to London Sunday night either on the Enchantress, which will be accompanied by two British destroyers, or in a private plane if the weather is fine.

V. S. Blundon, Of Forest Glen, Dies on Cruise

Washington Native Was in Real Estate Business for Many Years.

Victor S. Blundon, 40, of Forest Glen, Md., who had been in the real estate business in Washington for several years, died Wednesday in Costa Rica.

He was on a Southern cruise with his cousn, Kenneth Blundon, also of Forest Glen, and had visited several points in the West Indies and Panama.

Blundon, who complained of seasickness on the voyage, was taken off the boat at Costa Rica, when an attack of the stomach ailment which he had suffered for some time, caused him severe pain. A hemorrange proved fatal. He died at Fort Limon.

Born in Washington, Blundon was educated in the public schools here, and later attended Mout St. Mary at Emmitsburg, Md., and Catholic University.

He was in the Navy Department in Washington during the World War, and was ready to enter the air school at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, when the armistice was signed.

After he left the Navy Department he went into the real estate business with his father, Francis A Blundon.

The Blundon family, including the father, a mother, Mrs. Mary C. Blndon, and a brother, F. Edward Blundon, live at 10000 Georgia avenue. Victor Blundon also lived there. All of the immediate family survive.

Blundon was a thirty-second degree Mason, and a member of Almas Temple Shrine in Washington and to Masonic Lodge, No. 198, Kensington, Md. He also was a member of Grace Episcopal Church in Woodside, Md.

The body will reach New York August 2. Funeral arrangements are not complete.

Trapped Boy Saved As Well-Water Rises

Zanesville, Ohio, July 24 (AP).—Laird Ankrum, a 17-year-old farm youth, spent four hours today trapped at the bottom of a 25-foot well, then expressed surprise at the size of the crowd waiting as rescuers brought him to the surface.

"It looks like half the county was here to watch you fellows bring me out," said Ankrum with a weak smile, after he spent the last half hour of his imprisonment directing the volunteer rescue squad in removing rocks which pinned him down.

The rescuers won a race with water, which seeped slowly into the bottom of the well. The youth was trapped when the walls collapsed as he was cleaning the well. When they reached him the rising water was within a few inches of his face.

Air was pumped down a pipe to keep the imprisoned lad alive while the rescuers, including police and firemen from Zanesville and Newark, worked in relays to remove the rocks.

Milk Price War In Capital Area Seen at Hearing

AAA Marketing Proposals Assailed; Independents Held Silenced.

A milk price war between the District and surrounding suburbs will result from the marketing agreement proposed for the District by the AAA, N. O. Terpening, large-scale Montgomery County dairyman, declared at yesterday's hearing on the proposed measure in the Department of Agriculture auditoriums.

While Terpening and other farmers were asking that the agreement be extended to surburban areas beyond the District line to keep prices stable, Mrs. John Boyle, jr., president of the Washington Consumers Council, told reporters she considers the hearing, which began the first of the week and closes today, had been conducted in an unfair manner.

Declaring that the independent farmer has not been permitted to express his opinions, she said she would today ask Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, to examine the record.

"The record will show," she said, "that the officers of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association have been allowed to talk freely while the little fellows have been silenced by telling them their remarks were irrelevant."

Fears Disastrous Results.

The marketing agreement as proposed by the AAA will be disastrous to consumers in the District as well as to dairy farmers, Mrs. Boyle said.

"It certainly will result in a price war if dairymen selling to District distributors are governed by one set of rules while those selling to distributors in Chevy Chase and other Maryland suburbs are allowed to make their own regulations," she pointed out.

Terpening based his fear of price cutting competition on the same set of circumstances and said he believed the farmer should be permitted to sell as much as he can for whatever price he can get.

Under the agreement proposed by the AAA market administrator for the District would determine base ratings for the dairymen and would pay them a uniform rate, with the exception of certain premiums and deductions. The new set-up is expected to raise the retail price of milk in the District from 13 to 14 cents a quart.

Charges Are Hurled.

Charges that the distributors and not the milk-producing farmers are already getting the benefit of the profits in the milk industry were hurled at the hearing yesterday.

B. P. Parry, head of the Federal Trade Commission's milk investigation, said:

"This control agreement is going to be useless unless the administrator of the agreement is given the power to get the distributors' records of their actual money transactions."

Donald Montgomery, AAA consumers' counsel, also advised that the administrator be given the power to obtain the distributors' records at any time.

In order to learn what the farmer is actually getting for his milk Montgomery yesterday sent questionnaires to Washington's seven distributors, asking for their price schedules.

B. B. Derrick, treasurer of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, pointed out that the agreement will make prices paid the farmers for their basic amounts fluctuate with the markets. Many of the dairymen who testified asked that a minimum base be set since the farmer who produces 35 gallons is under a greater proportionate expense than the man who produces a daily output of 100 gallons.

Urges 4-Cent Raise.

Derrick, whose association numbers 1,100 of the 1,400 producers for the Washington market in its membership, advocated raising the price paid producers to 30.5 cents from the present average of 26.5 cents a gallon.

Clarence Dye, Frederick County commission buyer for Highland Farms Dairy, testified that he believed 22.5 cents to be a fair price.

Coleman Gore, of Leesburg, a broker for Fairfax Dairy, said he believed the base rating should be eliminated and that the price of milk should be permitted to fluctuate with the supply and demand, which would result in lower prices jn the spring and higher ones the last three months of the year.

Terpening advocated the placing of at least three grades of milk on the District market, selling them at different prices.

"Plenty of people," he said, "would be willing to pay more for an extra fine grade and other people who are now doing without milk entirely would be better off if they could get an 8 or 9 cent grade."

The hearing, with E. O. Mather as presiding officer, will be concluded today at 1 p. m.

Holds Price Rise Necessary.

Richmond, Va., July 24.—Kone Brugh, member of the State Milk Commission, said today many Virginia dairymen needed better prices for their milk "if they are to save their farms and their milk cans."

Pointing to a request of the Roanoke Co-operative Milk Producers Association for a 4-cent per gallon increase to producers, as well as requests from individual dairymen from other parts of the State for increases, Brugh said he believed the commission would find it necessary to order a general increase "not later than September 1."

"I am not an alarmist," he said, "but I do not believe the seriousness of the drought has been realized generally. I have traveled 1,200 miles over the State this month and seen some of the ruined pastures, 2-foot corn and scorched hay crops."

The production of milk will continue a "costly" industry for the next 18 months at least, he predicted. Feed supplies carried over from last year have been practically exhausted in some sections during the dry period, he said, and the hay crops this year will be insufficient to carry through the winter.

"Rain now can only give the pastures a brief spurt before the frosts set in, or maybe provide a little hay," he said.

Aid to Byrns For 14 Years Leaves Soon

Mrs. W. A. Robertson to Live in Montgomery, Husband's Station.

Departure Will Remove One of Social Set's Gracious Hostesses.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Never really "in" politics, yet closer to it than most of those whom the voters put in office, Mrs. W. A. Robertson will take priceless memories with her when she leaves the Capital August 3 for her new home in Montgomery, Ala. She has been in Washington since 1923, when she came from Tennessee as secretary to the late Speaker of the House Joseph W. Byrns.

Circumstances determining her going shaped themselves quickly and almost simultaneously. Her husband, Lieut. Robertson, of the United States Army Air Corps, has just received his orders to go from Bolling Field, where he has been on duty, to the Air Corps Tactical School in Montgomery. Mrs. Robertson, who had worked with Mr. Byrns for 14 years, had expected to commute between Montgomery, Memphis and Washington in order to continue as his secretary, but his sudden death before Congress was over, closed that chapter of her career and severed the ties which would have detained her here.

With Lieut. Robertson, their little son, Robbie and young daughters, Audrey and Gladys, Lieut. Robertson's children by a former marriage, and Betsy, Mrs. Robertson's daughter by a former marriage, she will go to Montgomery and possibly find time to recount some of the interesting things she knows of Washington. They will live in an old Southern place they have taken, called Hobbie House—a name their friends consider appropriate for a family in which both parents and children enjoy many hobbies.

Worked for Court.

Mrs. Robertson, the former Miss Margaret McLean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. McLean, of Kentucky, began her career in public life in her work for the Tennessee Court of Appeals, which sits in three divisions in different parts of the State. This brought her in contact with politicians throughout Tennessee. In 1922, following the Republican landslide of 1920 which engulfed the normally Democratic State, Representative Burns was chosen to direct the gubernatorial campaign and she was assigned to assist him. Their campaign was successful and Tennessee again supported Democracy.

The following year she was engaged as secretary to Representative Byrns and came to the Capital. He was the ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee and his young secretary worked with him on appropriations.

In December, 1931, he became chairman of the committee, then majority leader of the Seventy-third Congress and Speaker of the Seventy-fourth Congress. In 1928 he was made a member of the Democratic Congressional Committee, and became its chairman in 1930, in which capacity he had supervision of the election of Democratic Congressmen throughout the country. As his secretary, Mrs. Robertson shared his interest in all the details of this office and had her fingers on the political pulse of the Nation. Representative Patrick Drewry, of Petersburg, Va., has succeeded the late Speaker to the chairmanship of the committee.

Married Again in 1929.

Mrs. Robertson's first marriage was to Mr. Ralph Perry, from whom she obtained a divorce in 1925. Her marriage to Lieut. Robertson was in 1929, when he was assigned to duty at Bolling Field. He had come to this country several years before from Scotland, where he was a member of the British royal air force during the war. He took an aviation course here to keep up his flying, and eventually received a commission in the Air Corps of the United States Army. He has held the temporary status of captain for the past two years and now reverts to first lieutenant. Mrs. Robertson first met her husband through her brother, Mr. Charles McLean, of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, former aviation editor of the New York American.

Packing to leave Washington after her long and interesting residence here, has meant not only the packing of belongings in her home but also the assembling of documents and other material gathered during her close association with the affairs of Government.

One of her vivid memories of Mr. Byrnes, she says, is his speaking at the funeral services held in the Capitol for Representative Martin B. Madden, who died suddenly in his office there. At the time he was chairman of the Appropriations Committee. Mr. Byrnes, then the ranking Democrat on the committee, was serving under him. He and Vice President Dawes were selected to pay tribute to him at his funeral and Mr. Byrns' address was considered one of the finest ever delivered in Washington on such an occasion, because of its expression of sincere devotion for a friend despite his differing political faith.

Mrs. Robertson, in addition to having conducted her home and performed her official duties, has been active in the social life of Washington and will be missed as one of the gracious hostesses in the official set.

Leave for Savannah, Ga.

Mrs. Julian Peter Dell, jr., and her small son, Peter Dell 3d, have left for Savannah, Ga., to visit Mr. Dell's parents, the Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Dell.

Mrs. Dell, the former Miss Margaret Lundy, of Washington, recently returned from a year and a half spent in the Philippines. Mr. Dell is remaining in Manila on Government business.

Dr. and Mrs. Milton Marris are passing the week-end with Maj. and Mrs. Jesse Miller at their summer home in Bluemont.

Sara T. Mero, R. B. Williams Are Betrothed

Women's Bar Treasurer to Wed New York Civil Engineer.

Announcement has been made by Mr. and Mrs. J. William Mero, of Sanford, Fla., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Sara Talbert Mero, to Mr. Roger Butler Williams, jr., of Ithaca, N. Y., and New York City. The wedding will take place early in August.

Miss Mero, who is an attorney with the firm of Esch, Kerr, Taylor & Shipe, attended George Washington University and took her law degree from National University Law School. She is treasurer of the Women's Bar Association of the District of Columbia, and dean of Omicron Chapter, Kappa Beta Pi International Legal Sorority.

Mr. Williams received his degree in civil engineering from Cornell University and is a member of Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity, and of Sigma Xi, honorary scientic society. He is an investment banker and engineer in New York City.

Ensign DuBois, Wife To Visit Marblehead

Ensign and Mrs. Thomas Hodgskin DuBois, who were married Monday, are at present honeymooning in Canada, and will visit the home of the bridegroom's parents, Capt. Barron P. DuBois, U. S. N. retired, and Mrs. DuBois, at Marblehead, Mass. Ensign DuBois is attached to the U. S. S. Mahan, nearing completion at Staten Island.

Capt. and Mrs. DuBois, who reside in Washington, motored from Marblehead to attend their son's wedding. The ceremony was held in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension, Westminster, Md.

Captain Rohde And Bride View Wedding Film

Capt. Boerge Rohde and his bride, the former Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, United States Minister to Denmark, this week went incognito to a small motion picture theater in Portsmouth, N. H., to see pictures of their wedding ceremony.

They have been guests for a few days of Lieut. and Mrs. Robert B. Madden in Plymouth and, learning the pictures of their wedding in Hyde Park were to be shown nearby, they decided to attend the movie. Their efforts to enter the theater unnoticed were not successful, as townspeople identified them in their "personal appearance" in the audience.

Mrs. Madden was social secretary to the former Mrs. Owen while she was a member of Congress and later in Copenhagen. Mrs. Madden met Lieut. Madden in Denmark, where he was then attached to the U. S. S. New Orleans. He is now at the Portsmouth Navy Yard.

Motleys, Proctors Return to Capital

Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Motley and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Proctor, who were married a week ago in a double ceremony, have returned from their wedding trip to Virginia Beach.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Philip Murray, at 8:30 o'clock, at 1314 Connecticut avenue. Mrs. Motley is the former Miss Ruth Prahl. Mrs. Proctor was before her marriage Miss Marian Arnette.

After the ceremony the two couples left by motor for Richmond, where they visited Mrs. Motley's mother, Mrs. Edna Motley, and went from there to Virginia Beach.

Among the guests at the ceremony were Mrs. Hallie Cumbie and Mr. Frank Motley, uncle of one of the bridegrooms.

Younger Group Holds Parties Over Week-end

Miss Sally McCandlish Will Be Guest of Honor of Laura Johnson.

A group of the younger set, which has been having a round of informal parties for the last week, will have more of them this week-end, honoring guests from out of town.

Miss Sally McCandlish, of Baltimore, who is visiting her cousin, Miss Randolph Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Richardson, of White House, Fairfax, Va., will be a guest of honor tonight, with Miss Richardson, at a small dinner party being given by Miss Laura Johnson at her home.

Other guests include Miss Manvellite Sullivan, Mr. Nelson Money, Mr. Kelsey Saint, Mr. Harry Smith and Mr. Todd Wimsatt.

Last night Miss McCandlish and Miss Richardson were also present at a dinner given by Miss Betty Galt for her guest, Miss Lorraine Thomas, of Norfolk, Va., formerly of Washington. Others included were Miss Silvine Claggett, Mr. William Blanding, Mr. Edward R. Pierce, Mr. Robert McCandlish, jr., Mr. Raymond Fox and Mr. John Wallace.

Miss Thomas and Miss Mary Katherine Spinks were honored at a dinner Thursday night at Ashland Brook Farm, chaperoned by Mrs. Neitah King. Tomorrow a large party of young people will be guests at the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, going to swim and cook a picnic supper out of doors in the evening.

Mr., Mrs. Ralph D. Reed Arrive in Takoma Park

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Donald Reed have arrived in Takoma Park after their marriage Saturday evening in Collegedale, Tenn. Mrs. Reed, before her marriage, was Miss Dorothy Ann Goodrich, daughter of Prof. and Mrs. James Harry Goodrich, of Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. Reed is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Waldo Reed, of Takoma Park, D. C. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Henry J. Klooster, the president of the Southern Junior College, in the presence of the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom.

FrancesStarr In 3 Plays ThisSummer

Local Actress Is Signed for Appearances at 3 Playhouses.

Will Rejoin Her Husband, R. Golden Donaldson, After Engagements.

By Dudley Harmon.

Frances Starr, the youngest actress David Belasco ever starred—she was only 19 when he blazoned her name in large lights on Broadway—is opening next week playing the lead in "Kind Lady" at the Berkshire Playhouse in the hills of Lenox, Mass.

Miss Starr, who is better known to her friends in the capital as Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson, wife of the Washington attorney and former banker, has two other theater contracts this summer, all in New England. She will go to Ogunquit, Me., to star at the playhouse there for two weeks, and later to Maplewood, N. H., for another week.

Her last appearance on the Washington stage was in "The Lake," starring Katharine Hepburn, which was popular with Capital audiences, but closed after a comparatively brief run in New York.

Miss Starr, who was heroine of "Rose of the Rancho" and "The Music Master," maintains an active interest in the development of the theater, although it has been several years since she has appeared on Broadway. She spoke before the Judiciary Committee of the House a year ago, when it was considering the establishment of a national theater for the production of well-known plays, to be modeled after the Comedie Francaise in Paris. Congress finally granted the charter for such an enterprise, but nothing has yet been done toward launching the project.

Mis Starr, who lives at the Wardman Park Hotel when she is in the city, has spent little time in Washington during the past few months. Last winter she starred in "Kind Lady" in Miami, and she and her husband were in Arizona for several months where, incidentally, Mr. Donaldson's courtship of his wife began.

After her New England engagements, Mrs. Donaldson will join her husband at their home here for the remainder of the summer.

In addition to her acting, Miss Starr frequently reviews plays for producers. She is also interested in radio work, and yesterday gave a broadcast from Albany, N. Y., her home city.

Writers Guests Of Mrs. Foote

Mme. Lubovska Will Take Part in Program at Reception.

Mrs. Blanche Morgan Foote will entertain at a reception Sunday evening from 5 to 9 o'clock at her home in Alcova Heights, Va., for the Professional Writers Club of the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Foote's daughter, Mme. Desiree Lubovska, will take part in the entertainment. Mme. Lubovska has just returned from a year in South America, Portugal and London, where she has made a study of folk songs. She is, in private life, Mrs. H. Charlton Haughton.

Assisting Mrs. Foot and her daughter in receiving will be Miss Myrtle Ethel Cawood, president of he Professional Wriers Club; Mrs. Charles G. Helmick, Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, Miss C. Virginia Diedel and Mrs. Dawson Olmstead, members of the board. At the tea tables will be Mrs. Albert E. Dieterich, Miss Marguerite Merigold, Mrs. Mary Machin Gardner and Mrs. Pearl H. Stewart.

A program will be presented in the garden. Mme. Lubovska will sing a group of songs, and others on the program will include Mrs. Alice Cayle Torbert, Miss Florcine Hurley, Misses Adelaide Courtney, Lucille Hoff and Ruth Allen.

Morgenthaus HouseGuests Of Kennedys

Secretary and Wife Will Take Home on Cape Cod for Month.

Boettigers Also Are Staying at Hyannisport in New England.

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau have been spending several days this week as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kennedy at their summer home at Hyannisport on Cape Cod. Mr. and Mrs. Morgenthau have taken a house nearby for the month of July.

Other house guests staying with Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy included Mrs. John Boettiger, daughter of the President, and Mr. Boettiger, and the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and Mrs. James M. Landis.

Mr. Kennedy is the former chairman of the commission, and during his term of office he and Mrs. Kennedy occupied the magnificent Martin estate near Great Falls, Md. The house, which is of French architecture, was designed by the late Mr. Martin's wife. There are great bathtubs with solid gold fixtures and swimming pools with lights beneath the water.

During the summer, Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy frequently invited friends there for a showing of motion pictures on the broad terrace in the rear and afterward would take them on a tour of the house to see the famous bathtubs, the fully equipped movie theater downstairs, the ten bedrooms, and the magnificent drawing room, on the wall of which hung a striking portrait of Mrs. Martin, a former member of the Follies.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

"In My Particular Case Don't You Think I Would Be Justified in Committing Suicide?" Man Asks.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: You have answered so many perplexing questions with such a high degree of intelligence that I am writing you in the hope that you can be of some help to me. For some months now I have contemplated suicide, but am always restrained from doing so because of the disgrace it will bring on the family name. Scarcely a day goes by that I do not have it on my mind. The problem I am so anxious to have solved is how to rid myself of what is coming to be almost an obsession.

• • • •

Secondly, do you think suicide in some cases is justifiable? I realize fully that in the majority of cases, possibly, suicide is a cowardly act. I enjoy living as much as most normal persons; I have a powerful physique, good heredity, and take a healthy interest in all outdoor sports. But constant worry over not being employed has so depleted me mentally and nervously that I often think I should like to end it all.

• • • •

You will probably think it strange that a man with a college education, with two years' postgraduate work, cannot find some way to exist, but I find to my despair that I cannot locate in any kind of work. No doubt it is because of my age, yet even though I am 42, I still feel I could be of some use in the world. I am living now on money paid me in the bonus distribution, and when that is gone, I will have to decide between life on the streets or death, and the way I feel now, death would be sweeter.

• • • •

In my particular case don't you believe I would be justified in "putting an end to it all?" knowing full well that I am no longer capable of earning a living. Please do not suggest that I see a physician, as I am not in the least interested in a physician's opinion. I do, however, value your opinion very highly and would appreciate any suggestions you might make, to deliver me from this constant torment.

MR. WORRIED.

A Better Prescription.

DEAR MR. WORRIED: Snap out of it. Get in there and fight. One consoling thing about being absolutely and thoroughly down and out is that there is only one direction one can take from there—and that direction is upward. If you have a powerful physique, good heredity, a college education and approximately 30 years of life expectancy ahead of you, you would be the world's biggest fool to throw away all the chances you still have for making your life everything you have ever dreamed of its being.

• • • •

What you need are some tough realities to wrestle with; then you will be delivered from the torment of fighting phantoms. You need to go to bed at night so sore, mentally and physically, from a hand-to-hand struggle with tangible difficulties that you could sleep on a plank if that was the only thing you had to sleep on. And I have made arrangements to give you a chance at such a struggle.

• • • •

If you will come to my office, on the third floor of The Post Building, after first making a telephone appointment by dialing NAtional 4200, Branch 343, I will introduce you to two men. One of them, with an army background like your own, who is an official in the American Legion forces, will see that you get some good lusty social life among fellow Legionnaires. The other, likewise an ex-army man, will give you a chance at a job. It's a job that's none too easy; the pay may be small; he's a "tough guy;" he'll probably give you plenty of hell to use his own word before he gives you the job and probably plenty more of the same potent medicine along with it after you get it; but he'll give you a chance to prove yourself a man, if a man you are.

• • • •

Incidentally, there are several varieties of jobs this man can give you, and the better paying sort at the start would depend on your having a car. So if you still have enough money on hand to buy a second-hand conveyance, or make a down payment on a new one, hold on to it. However, if the money is nearly all gone, don't cry over spilled milk. You will still get something—if you can demonstrate your ability to deliver some kind of goods as an employe, that is—and it will be up to you to make the grade from there to the kind of occupation you are essentially fitted for.

• • • •

May I ask where you got the idea you are "no longer capable of making a living?" The fact that we have some 10 to 12 millions of unemployed in this country should be sufficient proof that it is the world and the times that are out of joint and not yourself who is incapable.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

A Sextet of Thirst Quenchers for Torrid Days

Hessler-Henderson.

A tall or short drink—which will you have on a hot summer day? Reading from left to right you have a choice of mint julep, sherry flip, old-fashioned lemonade, iced coffee, grape gingeree and frosted coffee. No matter which one you choose your selection will prove a delicious thirst quencher that will revive your faltering spirits.

Cool, Refreshing Beverages Soon Revive Faltering Spirits

Cheerful Music of Tinkling Glasses Eases Restlessness of Guests; Recipes for Several Drinks Provided by Post Expert.

By Dorothea Duncan.

FALTERING SPIRITS REVIVE immediately when the cheerful music of tinkling ice in tall glasses floats through the arid breeze of a drowsy summer afternoon or evening.

Every hostess, then, who would acquire fame should make it a point to appear on the threshold bearing a tray of cooling beverages before the first sign of restlessness from her guests.

Cold drinks depend for their appeal almost as much on sight and sound as they do on flavor. White frost rimming the glasses never fails to bring a cool tingle to the spine of the most heat-defeated victim. The plainest drink may be made impressive by using a few colorful decorations—raspberries, sliced strawberries, cherries, or a sprig of mint, for example.

Colored ice cubes also add to the sparkle of a simple beverage. These may be made of plain water, tinted with pure food coloring or fruit juice. A mint leaf or two or a bit of colored fruit also adds color to plain water cubs.

A novel way of preparing iced coffee heads the list of the following favorite summer beverages.

Iced Coffee.

Prepare coffee by any of the approved methods making it the preferred strength for drinking hot. Cool and fill freezing trays of automatic refrigerator with the beverage allowing the cube markers to remain in the trays during the freezing. Just before serving time prepare another quantity of hot coffee. Fill tall glasses two-thirds full with the frozen coffee cubes and add the fresh hot coffee until each glass is almost full. Serve accompanied by sugar sirup and cream.

Mint Julep.

1 cup lemon juice
1 bunch fresh mint
1½ cups sugar
½ cup water
3 pints gingerale
Ice

Add mint leaves, sugar and water to lemon juice. Let stand 30 minutes. Pour over a large piece of ice and add gingerale. Garnish each serving with a sprig of fresh mint which has been dusted with powdered sugar.

Old-Fashioned Lemonade.

4 lemons
2 cups sugar
½ cup water.

Cut lemons in thin slices, place in bowl, and cover with sugar. Mash thoroughly until all juice is extracted. Let stand one hour. Allow one or two tablespoons of the strained lemon juice to each serving. Pour into glass filled with shaved ice and fill with water. Garnish with maraschino cherry and slice of lemon.

Sherry Flip.

1½ jiggers Sherry wine.
1 raw egg.
½ teaspoon powdered sugar.

Shake well with shaved ice, strain into glass, dust top with nutmeg.

And Call It Accident

By Belloc Lowndes.

And as if to prove her right there came a ring at the front door.

Philip leaped up from his chair. There was a terrible look on his face, was it one of surprise, and could it be fear?

His wife stared at him. "Philip! What's the matter?"

"I—I don't know. I feel absolutely done in!" and he sank back in his chair.

She was already going to the door, and he heard a murmur of voices. Was there one man there, or two! He felt filled with vague alarm. It seemed a long time before his wife came in followed, to Philip's mingled relief and annoyance, by George Dwight, the American to whom he had taken an unreasoning dislike the only time they hed met. He was impressed, unwillingly, by the young man's look of splendid health and virility.

Iris observed: "Mr. Dwight has seen nothing of Ruth, but he's going back now to the Savoy, as she may have arrived there. Still, I thought he might as well see you for a minute or two, Phil. Also I want to show him Ruth's letter.'"

She went across to the table where she had put it down after reading it. "You see what she says?" and she handed the American the big sheet of the castle note paper.

George Dwight glanced at the few lines, and though there came across him no suspicion that what he had just read was not in Ruth's handwriting, he did feel slightly puzzled. Having known the girl all her life, he knew instinctively how she was likely to express herself, and somehow this letter appeared unlike her. But he was so relieved, and so glad, too, to learn that she had been in such a hurry to see him, that he was in no mood to be critical.

"It's a long way from Cornwall," said Philip Trefane thoughtfully, "and they must certainly have stopped for lunch on their way to London."

"My husband's only just arrived, and he took sandwiches with him. Yours was a nonstop run, I expect," and she smiled at Philip.

"Of course it was, and she'd have done better to stick with me."

Returns to Hotel.

Soon George Dwight went off back to the hotel feeling reassured. Iris and Philip sat up till 11:30, and were just going up to bed when the telephone bell rang downstairs.

"I expect that's Ruth!" cried Iris. "My dear girls, she doesn't know the number——"

"No more she does. How stupid of me."

She ran down to find it was George Dwight.

"Is Miss Starling with you?" he asked.

Iris called back: "No, she hasn't arrived. So I'm afraid they must have had a bad breakdown on the road."

"But wouldn't she have telephoned either to you or to me in that case?"

"She might have telephoned to you, but she doesn't know the number of this house yet. Still, I'm sure she's all right, and that we shall have news in the morning."

But when she joined Philip she said anxiously, "That girl hasn't turned up at the Savoy; I do wonder what can have happened to her?"

"Perhaps she's had an accident."

He was walking about the room in an aimless way, and Iris exclaimed: "O dear—that would be a complication! I wonder if we could get through to Scotland Yard and find out what accidents have occurred today on the Great West road? I do feel anxious, Philip."

TO HER SURPRISE he acquiesced. "I'll get through, darling. Don't worry!"

He went downstairs, and was away for nearly half an hour before he came back and said, "A couple motoring on the Great West road have been killed——"

"Killed?" She gave a cry of horror.

"Look here, my dear!"

He took her hand and made her sit down. "If that poor girl has really been killed, it wouldn't be altogether a bad thing for us."

"How do you mean?"

"Rawle made me insure Ruth Starling's life for a considerable amount," he said in a low tone.

Iris made a restless movement. "What a queer thing to do."

"Not queer at all. I have, even now, a very considerable insurable interest in her life. There's even a sporting chance that we might get the whole of the 50,000 pounds if she died as the result of an accident."

"Fifty thousand pounds? D'you mean to say that Ruth was insured for that immense sum of money?"

He said doggedly: "I can't think why you're so surprised, darling. Fifty thousand pounds was a reasonable amount in view of her great wealth."

She made no answer to that observation. Instead she said wearily, "It's getting very late, Philip. We'd better go to bed. Who knows what tomorrow will bring forth?"

He felt relieved by her words. Since he had told her of that insurance taken out on Ruth Starling's life he had felt a sensation of fear of what Iris would think, and might even suspect. But now he felt glad that she knew the bare fact. It would make it easier—afterward.

Victims Identified.

After they had got up next morning Scotland Yard rang through to reassure Capt. Trefane for the couple who had been killed on the Great West road had been identified by their friends; they were a married pair, coming back from their honeymoon.

He came up and told his wife the good news, looking, as she saw with secret gladness, much relieved.

"Hadn't you better get through to the Savoy?" she asked.

"Time enough for that," he said irritably, "after breakfast. After all, darling, if the girl is there, she is there, and if she's not, I don't see that we can do anything."

'Oh, yes, we can," said Iris quickly. "We might get through to the man in Lilyford from whom Ruth hired the motor car."

"We'll do that when we've exhausted all the other ways of finding out what's happened. After all, we don't want to start a lot of talk down there, do we?"

"I don't see that that would matter," and she looked at him with an expression that made him feel suddenly afraid, though as an actual fact she was only wondering if Ruth had suddenly accepted an offer of marriage made to her by Lord John, and so had cut her journey short at the manor house.

In due course the two maids arrived, and for a time Iris was absorbed in housewifely duties. But at last she joined Philip just after he had answered the telephone.

"Well? Is Ruth at the Savoy?"

"No, she's not, and I shall go crazy if that American chap keeps ringing up!"

To be Continued Monday.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Epidemic Poliomyelitis.

Poliomyelitis is not a new disease. In fact, an Egyptian carving of the eighteenth dynasty (1580-1350 B. C.) portrays the withered (atrophid) limb of a priest of the temple of Astarte at Memphis. The original is now in a museum in Copenhagen. In one of these books Hippocrates mentions the paralysis of the legs "that attacked many" and that occurred widely in the late summer or early autumn.

Many investigators believe that a large proportion of the population is affected in infancy or childhood and that many cases—possibly the great majority—are so mild that they are not recognized. The condition may be mistaken for an intestinal upset, a cold, or influenza.

Except in the presence of an epidemic, diagnosis before the onset of paralysis is difficult. There may be a slight weakness of the muscles, but this may be entirely overlooked. At the outset the patient is not considered ill—even by the parents. There may be a loss of appetite, some headache, vomiting, or muscle pains. The child will usually complain of feeling listless and tired. He wants to be let alone, and when aroused may be decidedly irritable.

The disease should be suspected if there is even a slight degree of stiffness in the neck muscles. Pain is sometimes evidenced on attempting to bend the neck forward. While this symptom may accompany almost any kind of fever—such as influenza—it is of importance should "polio" be rife in the neighborhood. Another significant sign is a trembling of one of the extremities. There is often increased sensitivity of the skin and some sweating. Double vision, weakness of the facial muscles, and difficulty in swallowing are quite characteristic in well established cases.

When to Use Serum.

Treatment of the acute attack is based upon meeting conditions as they arise, guarding against failure of breathing, and the use of serum from patients who have recovered from the disease. Tihs is known as convalescent serum and is probably our most efficient aid. Its use, however, is without avail if symptoms of paralysis have appeared. Repeated withdrawals of fluid from the spinal canal are of value, as this plan relieves pressure on already injured nerve tissue.

Inasmuch as the disease is probably conveyed from the sick to the well through nasal discharges, it is a matter of particular moment that the nose and the throat shall be kept clean. A weak solution of potassium alum has been recommended as a preventive since it has been shown that it will contract the mucous membranes so as to prevent the virus from gaining entrance to the nerve filaments. Well children may use this solution as a nasal irrigation if known cases exist in the vicinity.

Miss Irma E. Voight Says Program Improved Within Year.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

HOW TO HELP young men and women today without making "softies" of them is the problem confronting every person concerned with sustaining the morale of youth in depression times.

Yet this is being solved satisfactorily through the program of the National Youth Administration, in the belief of Miss Irma E. Voight, president of the department of deans, National Education Association.

Yesterday, between meetings of the conference of the NYA Dean Voight told why, in her opinion, the present youth program is "the most forward-looking thing ever yet done to strengthen the morale of young men and women and give them a chance in a changing world.

Program Improves.

"I confess that I have not always been convinced that college-age boys and girls could be helped without being hurt," she continued. "At the end of the first year that the NYA functioned, I was still not convinced. I felt jobs the students were given were inadequately supervised, that two many young men and women were working so many hours each week at jobs that were totally unsuited to them, that some were not kept busy enough to earn even the small prevailing wage of 30 cents an hour.

But in the last year, the program has been improved remarkably. Jobs are more carefully selected. Supervision is being improved. And in increasing numbers students are being employed in work that not only brings them money but also helps the institution they are attending."

Dean Voight further feels that the program as it is to be administered from now on "will in no respect give school-age boys and girls the idea that rewards in life come easy." In this connection she stressed the fact that each student who obtain financial aid from the NYA is required to work so many hours each week for the money to carry on his course.

"The difficulty, of course, lies in placing the student in a job that is on his intellectual level, something that will add to his development and eliminate the stigma of filing a job merely for the job's sake. Then, too, working from 12 to 16 hours a week in a cafeteria, library, correcting papers or doing stenographic work, a student needs constant supervision, and this presents additional problems.

Learn to Budget Time.

"But despite the odds, the boys and girls who earn their education under the auspices of the National Youth Administration are learning three important things that will help them as long as they live; they are learning how to budget time, money and energy. This knowledge is necessary to success in any line of work."

Discussing the plight of youth before the Government took a hand in its behalf, Dean Voight said, "The morale of modern boys and girls was in danger of being destroyed. For the first time in our history, even students with initiative, imagination and superior ability were finding it almost impossible to work their way through college. Something had to be done to preserve the resiliency, buoyancy and hope that belongs to youth. The NYA has opened the door to education for numerous boys and girls who could never have attended college. In view of its value in this regard and its potentialities, it seems it deserves to be placed on a permanent, rather than an emergency, basis."

DEAN IRMA E. VOIGHT tells how the National Youth Administration is making an education possible for deserving boys and girls.

Curtain-Hanging Tip.

If you have difficulty in making your draw curtains fit the dimensions of your doors or windows try this simple and effective way of obtaining the glove-like fit so desirable. First put up the rods. Then hem what is to be the top side of the curtain. Slip it on the top rod. Now, pin the bottom edge of the curtain on the bottom rod, using plenty of pins. Draw the curtains firmly and evenly. The effect will be just right.

Baking of Ham Theme of Post's Recipe Contest

BAKED HAM IS SUCH an important item in the culinary achievements of Washington and nearby Virginia and Maryland housewives that it has been chosen as the theme of next week's Post recipe contest.

All Post Food-Page readers are invited to enter their favorite recipes for baked ham in this contest. Six instead of the five usual prizes will be awarded next week. To the woman who submits the best recipe for baked ham a delicious giant ham will be awarded. The other prizes will be cash awards; second prize, five dollars, third, three dollars, and the three remaining prizes one dollar each.

To enter the contest merely write out your favorite recipe for baked ham and submit it to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post. Be sure in writing your recipe to include all such preliminary steps such as soaking, if required, precooking, etc.

Mail your entries in time to reach this office not later than next Saturday morning.

ARE YOU ON THE BORDERLINE OF ACTUAL SICKNESS?

Constipation* Causes Discomfort, May Lead to More Serious Troubles

You may have days, perhaps even weeks, when you feel below par. Not sick enough to go to bed, but certainly not at your best. The trouble may be with your diet. Poorly balanced meals can affect your physical condition.

Meals which lack proper "bulk," for instance, may lead to common constipation. Continued neglect of this condition causes discomfort, may lead to headaches, poor appetite, listlessness.

Guard against common constipation.* Make sure the meals you eat contain plenty of "bulk." Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is a generous source of effective "bulk." Within the body, it absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, and gently cleanses the system.

Two tablespoonfuls daily, with milk or cream, are usually sufficient. Stubborn cases may require ALL-BRAN oftener. Serve ALL-BRAN either as a cereal, or cooked into muffins, breads, etc. Eat it regularly for regular habits.

ALL-BRAN is guaranteed by the Kellogg Company. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

*Constipation due to insufficient "bulk"

Airport Unit Meets to Hear Inquiry Facts

Senator King Says Decision on District Site Will Be Delayed.

He Refuses to Reveal What Fields Are Under Study.

The Airport Commission, created at the last session of Congress to recommend a site for a proposed new airport to be owned jointly by the Federal Government and the District, met behind closed doors yesterday to hear a sub-commitee report the results of its investigation of the problem.

Senator William H. King, of Utah, chairman of the nine-member commission, said that no decision was reached yesterday which he was ready to make public. The sub-committee, he said, would continue its study of possible locations for the port.

The two sites that have been most prominently mentioned are Gravelly Point and Washington Airport. There has been so much controversy over both, however, that the selection of an entirely new field has been urged.

Favor Either.

Most of the members of the present commission have at one time or another gone on record as favoring either the Gravelly Point or the Washington Airport location.

Although all have insisted that they were preserving open minds toward all suggested sites, it has been said in some quarters that the creation of the commission resulted only in transferring the controversy to a smaller arena.

Senator King refused to reveal what fields are under consideration by the sub-committee or how they are going about their investigation of sites. No money was appropriated to the commission for carrying on the work.

Created by Congress.

When the commission was set up last April by an act of Congress, the sponsors of the act hoped their findings might be reported before adjournment. The commission was authorized to report at the earliest practicable date.

Those serving on the sub-committee which reported to the commission yesterdy are Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Army Air Corps; Representative Jack Nichols, of Oklahoma, and Senator Warren R. Austin, of Vermont.

The other members of the commission are Senator King, Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York; Representatives Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, and W. Sterling Cole, of New York; Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and Engineer-Commissioner Dan Sultan.

New York Ave. Will Be Opened On Wednesday

New York avenue, closed for 30 years to eastbound traffic from Pennsylvania avenue at the Fifteenth street intersection, will be opened Wednesday.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer said yesterday a new traffic light will be installed at the intersection, the familiar tub of the traffic officer discarded and traffic will be permitted to flow both east and west on New York avenue.

This means that traffic may move into New York avenue from Pennsylvania avenue, and vice versa.

Van Duzer said he and his engineering staff have developed a complicated set of dual lights for the intersection which will include two lights on each corner. The lights will operate on a 40 second cycle.

Street cars, the traffic director explained, will move on every other cycle if they are to make turns into and from Pennsylvania avenue.

This system, he said, would prevent interference with north and south bound traffic.

Opening the intersection to east and west bound traffic, Van Duzer believes, will facilitate movement of traffic from the congested area with greater speed. Coupled with the new lighting system, he said, it would provide "much-needed protection for the pedestrians."

The new signal will permit only one left turn, however. Northbound traffic on Fifteenth street will be allowed to turn left into Pennsylvania avenue. There will be no restriction on right turns.

Honored

The Metropolitan Police Boys Club, which he sponsored during his tenure in Congress, last night played a concert in honor of Representative William B. Oliver, of Alabama, who is retiring from Congress at the end of this term.

A host of notables in the District, including Maj. Ernest Brown, superintendent of police and head of the Police Boys Club, and Mrs. Brown, were present.

The concert was held on the lawn of Representative Oliver's home at 1637 Wyoming avenue northwest.

Oliver, former dean of the law college at the University of Alabama, has been active for many years in the Washington Boys Club.

He introduced several members of the Boys Club Band, calling them by name. He spoke for a few minutes, praising the work of the club and Maj. Brown.

"It is one of the greatest youth movements," he said, "that we ever have had in our city. Maj. Brown has been far-sighted in organizing the movement. It has given opportunities to boys who never have had any chance in life."

Oh! Boy!! It's Melon Time

Elva C. Brings First Boatload Of Watermelons for 4th Year

Washingtonians Flock to Wharf, Eat Giant Fruit at Waterfront After Cap'n Self Pilots Squat Vessel Here From North Carolina.

Her name is Elva C. She is a squat old tub. She sits in the water like a watermelon in a country well where it is put to cool off.

Elva C. is a watermelon boat.

Elva C. sidled up to Seventh street wharf yesterday. She was bristling from stem to stern with watermelons. She is the first to bring a boatload of melons to Washington this season.

Harry Self, sandy-haired watermelon king of the river, who has been the first man into this city with a boatload of watermelons for the past four years, piloted the boat through the inland waterway for 400 miles to bring the shipload to Washington.

The melons came from North Carolina. They were shipped from Morehead City, on the coast, hard by the swamps. The melons were picked ripe from the fields just 60 hours ago.

It didn't take long for people to find out the good ship Iva C. was resting with her cargo at Seventh street wharf. By early afternoon there were a lot of people there, eating watermelon.

Especially, there were a lot of colored people. They love watermelons. It is their dish. Only they break them open and eat them with their mouths and hands. Forks are outlawed.

That's the way they eat them down South. That's the way they always have done and it's still good manners to eat watermelon that way down South. Watermelons bar a lot of laws and customs and etiquette in the South. It's almost legal to steal—if it's a watermelon. It's almost polite to eat without a fork—if it's a watermelon.

The watermelons are selling for 30 and 40 and 50 cents apiece. They really are giant melons.

Most of the people who came down yesterday didn't even bother to take the melons home. They ate them right there at the wharf and Harry Self, who knows a lot about watermelons, said if the seeds would grow in the Potomac where the people throw them, that there wouldn't be any use shipping them to Washington next summer.

There were so many seeds that there'd be enough melons for everybody.

A little colored boy said he "shore did wish that was so, mister," and kept on munching his melon—the conventional way.

Supreme Court Asked to Delay 40 SEC Suits

Move by Reed Designed to Allow Decision on One Test Case.

In a move to allow one test case decide the validity of the 1935 Public Utility Holding Company Act, Solicitor General Stanley Reed yesterday petitioned the Supreme Court to authorize postponement of more than 40 suits brought against the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The petition asked the Supreme Court to reverse a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District refusing to permit postponement of suits brought by the North American Co. and the American Water Works and Electric Co.

The District Supreme Court had previously agreed to postponement after the Attorney General had made a special plea for such action.

In his petition to the Supreme Court, Solicitor General Reed said he believed the constitutionality of the holding company act might best be tested in a case now before the Southern District Court of New York involving the Electric Bond & Share Co.

A decision in this case would, the Government believes, dispose of the questions involved. The Electric Bond & Share Co., Reed explained, is the "best known and one of the oldest of the great public utility holding company systems."

It gives a "true picture" of the situation, he said, and comes in contact with the act at more points than any other holding company."

The temporary delay of other cases pending a decision on the Electric Bond & Share Co. suit, would, Reed asserted, save much "time, labor and expense." There was "no justification," he said, "for clogging the calendars and overtaxing the facilities of the courts with complicated, multiplicitous and expensive suits" when the major questions of law involved could be settled in the single case mentioned.

Neither the North American nor the American Water Works & Electric Co. suit would decide as many points involved, the Solicitor General said.

Reed promised that while the New York test case was awaiting decision the Government was taking "every possible precaution to safeguard the rights of the holding companies."

1938 Budget Cuts Asked Of D. C. Units

Hazen, Donovan, Keddy Address Department Heads on Economy,

Plan for New Jail Is Abandoned After Inspection Trip.

Heads of departments in the District Government were called together yesterday and told to practice rigid economy in preparing their 1938 budget estimates, lest municipal expenditures cause an increase in taxes here.

The department heads were addressed by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, and John Keddy, Assistant Federal Budget Director.

Hazen pointed out that expenses of the local government had been going up at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. He granted that the city was growing and that some increase was justified, but he expressed the opinion that there was a general inclination among department heads to overestimate the importance of their particular activities.

Estimates Cut.

The Commissioner recalled that the Budget Bureau, in going over the current or 1937 District budget, had to prune estimates totaling $8,000,000.

Maj. Donovan reminded the department heads that expenditures in the current fiscal year are expected to exceed revenus by $4,000,000. Obviously, he said, there must be economy if the District is to go along with its present tax rate of $1.50 on every $100 worth of real estate.

Assistant Budget Director Keddy advised the department heads with respect to listing their estimates.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said yesterday that he favored reconditioning of the District Jail rather than supplanting it with a new building. He recently inspected the jail with Engineer Commissioner Dan I. Sultan.

Still Sturdy.

"There are many things wrong with the old building," he said, "but fundamentally it still is a sturdy building. In view of the present condition of the District's finances, I favor remodeling of the building and possibly the construction of an annex to reduce crowding."

Hazen said that, in any remodeling scheme, some provision should be made for a death house. At present, condemned men are electrocuted at the north end of the mess hall—an arrangement that has been widely criticized.

He also agreed with Capt. Thomas M. Rives, superintendent of the jail, that there ought to be an automatic cell-locking system, whereby all cells could be locked or unlocked at one time. This would be valuable in case of fire, he said.

Fowler, Kelly Are Considered For Police Job

Reports that either Lieut. John H. Fowler, police ballistics expert, or Lieut. Lloyd Kelly, of the Eleventh Precinct, would be promoted to a captaincy were circulated about headquarters yesterday.

The names of both men, it was said, were among the three highest averages returned in the civil service examinations by mail yesterday. Kelly heads the list, with Lieut. Walter Thomas second and Fowler third.

Thomas was eliminated by most officials as much of his time has been spent at administrative headquarters, and the appointment is for a captain in the Eighth Precinct.

Kelly, who has the highest average, was appointed to the force in 1919, and has done all his duty in the precincts, giving him the necessary qualifications.

Although he has been in the department since 1922, Fowler has advanced rapidly.

His appointment would deprive the department of its ballistics expert and a person who is considered its best scientific investigator. His work on the Brady bombing case in 1930 and on the recent Wilson case, during which he helped bring to trial the members of the Tri-State gang, weighs heavily in his favor. His advanced methods of police work and scientific study, officials said, may win him the job.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday said he had not received the certified three highest marks from the Civil Service Commission and would not return his selection until the first part of next week.

No comment was made upon selections for two lieutenancies and three vacant sergeancies yet to be filled from the new list.

Mother Asks Writ To Free Her Son

Seeking to obtain the release from the National Training School for Boys of her 15-year-old son, Mrs. Eva H. Johnson yesterday filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in District Court by which she hopes to test the legality of his confinement.

Mrs. Johnson lost her first attempt to obtain the boy's release when a petition for a new trial in the Juvenile Court was disallowed after a hearing by Judge Fay L. Bentley. Mrs. Johnson, through Attorneys Fred J. Icenhower and W. K. Teepe, asserted her son had been allowed to plead guilty without the advice of counsel and had not been granted a jury trial.

Allen Becomes Election Issue In Mississippi's Senate Race

District Commissioner George Ed Allen has become an "issue" in the bitter election battle is Mississippi between Senator Pat Harrison and former Gov. Sennett Connor, who is seeking Pat's seat.

Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, who is backing Connor, said recently that Allen belonged to a Hoover club in 1932, and that Harrison put over a "swift one" in having President Roosevelt appoint him a District Commissioner.

The truth is, of course, that Allen organized the hotel men of the country into a Roosevelt-for-President Club in 1932.

A native of Booneville, Miss., Allen yesterday laughed at Bilbo's allegation.

"Why," he said, "I never saw a Republican until I was 12 years old. And I only saw one then because I was taken to St. Louis."

Allen predicted that Senator Harrison would carry every county against Connor, and would beat him by 3 to 1. Victory in the primary election on August 25 will be tantamount to election in November.

Harrison, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is seeking his fourth term in the Senate.

Luhring Signs Rule to Enjoin Game Seizure

Justice Says Irreparable Injury Would Ensue From Action Now.

Declares Final Decision Should Await Full Evidence Showing.

Pointing out that if the Pioneer Novelty Distributing Corporation, which owns and operates some 2,000 pin-ball machines here, is enjoined from using them now, the corporation "will undoubtedly and certainly sustain damage impossible to measure and irreparable; whereas, if an injunction be granted the injury to the defendants, even if the final decree be in their favor, will be inconsiderable," Justice Oscar R. Luhring in District Court, yesterday signed a formal order enjoining the seizure of pin ball machines in the District.

The ruling had been announced orally last week at the conclusion of an acrimonious hearing in which United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, his aid, John J. Wilson, and William R. Lichtenberg, the latter representing the Pioneer Co., sought to obtain opposing rulings.

Col. Garnett claimed the pin machines were games of chance and as such were barred by District statutes, while Lichtenberg contended the machines were games of skill and were perfectly permissible.

Data Insufficient.

The hearing, held in the summer term, was insufficient for obtaining all data on the games, and in absence of a complete hearing, Justice Luhring decided to enjoin the police and Garnett from seizing and confiscating the machines, a threat that was contained in a letter, Garnett wrote to Maj. E. W. Brown, Chief of Police, in June.

The ruling yesterday advanced the trial of the case on the merits to an early date in the fall term of court.

This, Justice Luhring wrote, would make it possible for one of the justices to go thoroughly into the question whether the pin-ball machines were violative of the law or were merely amusement devices.

Signed Order.

Following closely upon the signing of the order, Justice Luhring signed a rule to show cause requiring Col. Garnett and Maj. Ernest Brown, Chief of Police, to show cause by Wednesday why the so-called "claw" machines which were placed on the official tabboo list several months ago, should not be permitted to operate.

Attorneys Julian Richards and William Gallagher, in a petition signed by Freda Boosalis, 1300 Park road northwest, who claimed to own 40 claw machines, said immediate and irreparable injury was bound to occur to their client unless police were temporarily stayed from interfering with their operation.

The rule to show cause will thresh out the question of whether the claw machines can operate until the fall term of court on the strength of a temporary injunction, or shall be continued on the banned list, where they have been since early spring.

Suydam Returns As Cummings Aid

Henry Suydam, Attorney General Cummings' press adviser, was back at his desk in the Department of Justice yesterday.

A former war correspondent and Washington representative of the Brooklyn Eagle, Suydam lost his post as special assistant to the Attorney General July 1 because of a rule inserted by Congress that holders of that office must be lawyers.

He has returned to work in the Justice Department with the title "special executive assistant to the Attorney General," he told reporters yesterday.

Federal Art Classes Promote Creative Faculty of Students

Interest Ranges From Realistic to Imaginative, but Stress Placed on Latter, Teachers Say; Work Is Proving Great Success Here.

Promotion of imagination—man's powerful creative faculty—is the purpose of two art classes which the Federal art project now is conducting in Rock Creek Park.

The classes, held each Wednesday and Saturday, are being attended by nearly 300 children and adults.

Interest in the classes, teachers say, ranges from the realistic to the creative. But it is on the creative that most of the stress is placed.

One of the teachers told this tale about a pupil:

"A passing critic looked at her painting of two boys wading in Rock Creek. The boys had just left when the critic arrived to say she didn't see any boys wading. 'It must be your imagination,' she told the painter."

"That is the very thing we are trying to promote," the teacher said. "We appreciate the fact, however, that some of the students wish merely to record photographically what they see. Others, we know, wish to go further than that. Even some of the children wish to inject their own personality into their work.

"Interest is running high in the classes. The other day we had nearly 150 in each class. Registration is still going on.

"Some of the children and grown-ups, too, are bringing their lunches and spending all day in the park painting."

Classes also will sketch animals at the Zoo and plants and trees on the grounds of the Capitol. Capt. McHenry, of the Zoo, will give a talk on trees to help the artists understand the structural differences in the leafy forms of nature.

The classes are being held two days a week from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.

St. Elizabeths Patient's Death Holds 2 Guards

Coroner's Jury Calls for Action; Attack Is Basis of Charge.

Two St. Elizabeths Hospital attendants, John Ferguson, 29, and Robert Bruner, 27, were held for action of the grand jury by a coroner's jury yesterday at the morgue for the death of Howard Hawkins, 32, colored mental patient, July 22.

The men, police said, had been identified by Hawkins before his death as the attendants who kicked and choked him during an altercation at the hospital on May 23. Both Ferguson and Bruner had been charged with assault until a few days ago. The charge was nolle prossed by Assistant District Attorney Eugene Carusi until Hawkins could recover.

Both men on the stand denied they had used undue force in subduing Hawkins.

In their efforts to quiet him, they said, all three fell on a bed and the colored man landed beneath them on the floor. Anthony Sputis, charge nurse, also under suspension from the hospital as a result of the incident, substantiated their testimony.

Testimony by Dr. Ralph J. Haws, hospital surgeon who operated four times on Hawkins in an attempt to save his life, revealed that the colored man suffered a rupture of internal organs and that peritonitis had developed.

Women's Club Federation Adds Its Protest on One-Man Cars

Opposition to more one-man cars in Washington continued to mount yesterday as the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs filed its protest with People's Counsel William A. Roberts.

Mrs. Lloyd A. Morrison, chairman of transportation for the federation, told Roberts in a letter that experience had shown the one-man car is not as satisfactory as one manned by a motorman and a conductor.

The fact that the operator of a one-man car must collect fares slows down the car, she said. She also cited crowding on the front platforms of one-man cars, and told of cars so crowded passing her by, although there was plenty of room in back.

"I have seen the automatic doors on the rear close on the hands and arms of passengers before they could get clear of the closing door," Mrs. Morrison wrote.

The Capital Transit Co. has asked the Public Utilities Commission for permission to add 40 one-man cars to its fleet of 71.

Striking and Picketing Is Given as Reason for Suspension.

Lodge Has Been Seeking Reinstatement of 7 Fired Clerks.

The executive council of the American Federation of Government Employes announced at a meeting of the District Department at the Hamilton Hotel last night that the Department of Justice Lodge, No. 21, had been suspended from the federation.

The Department of Justic Lodge had been fighting for the reinstatement of seven fingerprinting clerks which it alleges were discharged from the Justice Department for union activity.

Spokesmen for the lodge last night said that Ira Y. Bain, of the executive council, had given striking and picketing activity as the reason for the suspension. The lodge spokesman denied both of the actions.

Bain could not be reached, but members of the executive board said no reason for the suspension was advanced at the meeting.

The lodge spokesman, who preferred to remain anonymous, also charged the executive board with making the suspension without granting the lodge a hearing. This, they said, was in violation of the A. F. G. E. constitution.

It was said last night that an inter-lodge committee is being set up to fight for reinstatement of the Justice Lodge and of the seven clerks ousted from the department. Normally, suspended lodges can ask for reinstatement at the annual convention, to be held this year in September, at Detroit.

U. S. Educators Close Session; Ask Needy Aid

Prominent educators of the nation, called to Washington to discuss "a continuing program for youth," closed a five-day session yesterday after discussing every phase of the Government's program to aid needy college and high school students and issuing a plea for its continuance.

Report of the committee on policy, which was headed by Dean William E. Alderman, of Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, declared that its "beneficial by-products have been greater than could have been anticipated."

He made this statement in behalf of his committee which spent five days studying the accomplishments of the student aid program:

"In the light of these and other considerations your committee feels that it is highly desirable that the relief agencies of our Government that have to do with welfare of the youth of the land, and that established government agencies responsible for general educational policies, begin now to consider seriously the problem that will obtain when the NYA will no longer be justified as an emergency organization.

"It seems reasonable to assume that the vivid experience of the depression has done much to enliven our social consciousness. Quite apart from administrations, social apathy must not be the price we pay for a return to prosperity."

The committee of recommendations, under leadership of Dean Irma E. Voight, of the University of Ohio, adopted in full the recommendations submitted by Alderman's committee.

A Unique Bill Hits Bull's-Eye At Loew's Fox

'Spring Is Here' and New Harlow Film Click; Other Programs.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SUZY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Herbert Gorman, starring Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone and Cary Grant, with Benita Hume, Reginald Mason, Inez Courtney, Greta Mayer, David Clyde and Una O'Connor. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Reviewed Friday morning. "SPRING IS HERE," on the stage.

As was forecast in this space yesterday, Ernest Truex and his associates came through with flying colors in "Spring Is Here," a revamped and slightly curtailed version of the Broadway musical comedy hit, produced and presented by Gene Ford as the stage attraciton for the week at Loew's Fox Theater.

BELL.

Other tabloid musical comedies, from time to time, have been offered on local motion-picture stages in lieu of the usual vaudeville or revue type of entertainment, but never within my recollection one that combined in such excellent balance the elements of romance, comedy, tunefulness, color and movement.

There is no need to attempt even a cursory resume of the feather-light and flippant "book" of "Spring Is Here," beyond saying that it is perfectly adapted to precisely the lively uses to which it has been put. It reflects an author's frivolous notions of what might happen in and about an ostensibly quiet suburban home in which two charming daughters are being wooed by a variety of ardent suitors, the paterfamilias driven practically crazy trying to keep his household in smooth running order and his wife frittering away her maternal authority in a series of flighty, but innocent flirtations, on her own account. The score of ten numbers is as conspicuously meritorious.

Brought Down to Date.

The lines have been modernized and enlivened with great skill and the entire work, which is presented in some seven scenes or so, quickly establishes itself as a sound basis for an hour and a quarter of amusing, breezy and fast-moving entertainment that pretends to no greater function than to afford spirited diversion at a season when audiences prefer not to sit back and wrestle with "problems" on involved chromatics.

Ernest Truex, in the role of the father, imbues the part with his accustomed pep and in that regard no more than noses out Chester Fredericks, June Carr, Dorothy Scott, cast as his wife; Lew Parker, Barbara Towne, Ralph Magelssen, Alex Courtney, Madelyn Killeen and a few others who appear in minor roles. Chester Fredericks is a dynamo of well-directed energy, and June Carr romps away with the feminine laughmaking honors as a slightly rowdy young lady who knows her own mind—intimately! Barbara Towne and Alex Courtney are fine juvenile leads and Ralph Magelssen displays the best male voice in the cast. Chester Fredericks' dancing is one of the hits of the show and the chorus comes in for its full measure of acclaim.

Smooth First Performance.

The first performance, everything considered, was one of remarkable speed and surety that gave rich promise of a week of musical fun of a nature to which the Fox stage is unaccustomed. Gene Ford is to be congratulated upon the success of his venture and no little praise is due Lew Parker and Ned McGurn for their direction of dramatic action and dances, respectively.

On the screen for the new week at the Fox is "Suzy," newest starring vehicle for the vibrant talents of Jean Harlow, with Franchot Tone, assuming a bit of an Irish brogue, and Cary Grant in the co-stellar male leads.

The story of "Suzy" is a crisp and crackling sort of thing, having to do with the adventures of a stranded show girl in Europe in 1914 and the manner in which she not only awoke one fine day to discover that she was married to two men, but managed to get herself mixed up in a spy plot and two shootings, to boot.

The dialogue of this engaging subject has been fashioned with a fine eye and ear for brittle wit and the action pursues a course of cumulative excitement to an aerial climax that revives the old "dog fights" of the Western Front with picturesque beauty and savage battling.

Villains Get Their Due.

The details of the spirited narrative need not be disclosed further than to say that the plotters against the government and the happiness of all concerned are "bumped off" with neatness and not too much dispatch at a time when it will do the most good.

In addition to her characteristic portrayal of a typically explosive role, Miss Harlow finds opportunity to sing one song and step a few lively measures in the role of the musical comedy queen. The Messrs. Tone and Grant play with acceptable deference to their blonde associate, with Mr. Tone having a shade the better of it by virtue of a part slightly the superior of the one assigned Mr. Grant. The others in the cast acquit themselves with the skill to be expected of a Lewis S. Stone, Benita Hume and Inez Courtney.

The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's orchestral interludes augment a bill that quite justified yesterday's overflow crowds and their unbridled enthusiasm.

"PAROLE." Universal picturizatio.. of a story by Kubec Glasmon, Joel Sayre and Horace McCoy, featuring Henry Hunter, Ann Preston, Grant Mitchell, Alan Hale, Noah Beery, jr., and Alan Baxter. Directed by Louis Friedlander. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

With a subject that should have made a stirring picture, Universal has turned out instead a sort of illustrated lecture.

If only it would settle down to being somebody's story that you could care about, but it doesn't. Some pictures are spoiled by lack of action, others by too much, but "Parole" suffers in rather unique fashion from both complaints, too much and too little. For it fluctuates in uneven fashion between quiet, conversational, dull and argumentative discussions of its problem, far less dramatic than a newsreel, to blood-curdling and unbelievable killings and involved rackets.

What personal story it has to tell deals principally with four paroled men. Three, Marty, Russ and Bobby, are not criminals in the accepted sense and want honest lives, while the fourth, Okay Smith, is almost too busy killing a fellow prisoner to go before the board to get his parole.

Is Victim of Rackets.

Russ gets a job, only to find himself involved in the most brazen and all inclusive racket we've ever seen practiced right out in open daylight by the meanest, oneriest bunch of racketeers on record. He cuts free from them, can't find an honest job, and finally tells his story to a crusading newspaper editor. Then he has to start running for his life from assorted frozen-face killers. In the end, the "bad men" are killed, or caught, Russ is pardoned and is going to get married and have a career, and the parole system is reformed, which may give you a suspicion that Universal tried to get too inclusive about its subject matter.

What makes it additionally difficult to figure out is the nice problem presented in trying to tell just which people in the picture are sincere at what moment. The crusaders particularly never seem to mean what they say; maybe the actors just weren't sure.

Lack of sincerity cannot be alleged, however, against Henry Hunter, who plays Russ. He is young, attractive, well spoken and earnest, a very promising newcomer. Grant Mitchell, always a good actor, is also clear about which side of the fence he is on. Noah Beery, jr., is interesting in a small part.

Three Alans in Cast.

The three meanest customers are played by three Alans—Dinehart, as the big villain, but rather likeably debonair; Baxter, the young man who never moves a muscle nor raises an inflection, adding at least three victims to that sizable list of murders he has committed in recent movie months, and Hale, his usual competent self.

One the distaff side, there are two new faces, both pretty. Bernadene Hayes is the blonde and works a little hard, while brunette Ann Preston sounds distressingly near baby talk at times, but quite all right at others.

Completing the bill are four subsidiaries, including an excellent visit to lovely Williamsburg, Va., in "Going Places," with Lowell Thomas; an amusing color cartoon, "Waif's Welcome;" the newsreel, notable for King Edward's plea for peace made on the day of his threatened assassination, and a Louis Prima short with a swing band that sounds good, but looks terrible—close your eyes on this one.

"HIGH TENSION." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by J. Robert Bren and Norman Houston, with screen play by Lou Breslow. Edward Ellscu and Joan Patrick, featuring Brian Donlevy and Glenda Farrell, supported by Norman Foster, Helen Wood, Robert McWade, Theodore Von Eltz, Romaine Callender, Jasper Sawyer, Hattie McDaniel and Murray Alper. Directed by Allan Dwan. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

While one might expect from the title of this work that the picture would deal with some aspect of those tall towers decorating the countryside, "High Tension" actually is a yarn of quite another transmission line—submarine cables, and of the men who go below the seas to keep the arteries of communication operating.

"High Tension" possesses no claim to greatness; in physical investiture, it is not lavish; in acting personnel, it is satisfactory; there is no particular attempt to expose the technical aspects of the business. Yet, withal this, as entertainment of the time-passing sort, the picture has its moments. It is a diverting, if occasionally transparent, story and it moves with a reasonable rapidity and is punctuated with elements of both drama and light comedy.

Brian Donlevy and Norman Foster are a couple of cable engineers, and with Glenda Farrell and Helen Wood, respectively, to furnish the major heart interest, the suggested line of developments are realized. In the realization, however, there is plenty or room for brawls in which Hero Donlevy seldom comes out on top, for sundry remarks such as Heroine Farrell is especially well known and for some sea action to add a change of locale.

Callender Scores.

Outstanding in the company is one not unknown to Washingtonians, a man of distinguished bearing and an actor of accomplishments. He is (for those who did not read the italicized paragraph above) none other than Romaine Callender, for many seasons the distinguished "heavy" in the National Theater Players. It is especially gratifying to see even his shadow again and while he is fine as the big boss' secretary, one might wish so capable an actor might have a part more befitting his talents.

Others in the cast include Robert McWade, as the crotchety company prexy; Theodore Von Elitz, Jasper Sawyer, Hattie McDaniel and Murray Alper.

The supporting program continues and the general lightness of the bill, with "Peaceful Relations" offering Tim (Ryan) and Irene (Noblette) in an amusing comedy of camping with all the in-laws; "How to Sleep," a reissue of the academy prize-winning subject, with Robert Benchley giving the directions; an issue of the Paramount Pictorial revealing the technique of Camera Artist Edward Steichen, scenes of the U. S. S. Tuscaloosa, and a nest of humming birds poised above a busy Hollywood boulevard, and the Metrotone News.

"THE WHITE ANGEL." First National picturization of a screen play by Mordaunt Shairp, starring Kay Francis, with Ian Hunter, Donald Wood, Nigel Bruce, Donald Crisp, Henry O'Neill, Billy Mauch, Charles Croker-King, Phoebe Foster, Georgia Caine, Hallwell Hobbes, Eily Malyon, Montagu Love, Ferdinand Munier, Temple Piggott, Barbara Leonard, Ara Gerald and Harry Cording. Directed by William Dieterle. Reviewed Friday afternoon (repeat engagement) by Sally Stroud.

Florence Nightingale stayed home one night from a dinner party and read her father's report on conditions in the hospitals of London. Dismayed by the carelessness and incompetence rampant in the nursing profession, she determined to try to alleviate the situation.

It was difficult. Queen Victoria was "the only woman in England who could do a man's work and have a man's opinion;" woman's place was definitely in the home; there was only one school in Europe where nursing was taught—at Fliedner's, in Germany. To Germany went Miss Nightingale, against the wishes of Charles, her fiance, and her family. From the first she was devoted to her chosen profession. It seemed, however, that she would not be allowed to practice it.

Not until Press Correspondent Fuller wrote appalling reports of the increasing death rate among English soldiers during the Crimean War was Miss Nightingale allowed to see active duty.

The Horrors of War.

The wounded were transported to Scutari, across the Black Sea. Scutari was hospital headquarters for the White Angel and her band of women workers. Animosity from high military medical authorities, dearth of supplies, insurection among her nurses, typhus, cholera—these were some of the things harassing the lovely, somber girl who had dedicated her life to the sick and suffering, and who gave to the nursing profession its highest reverential ideals.

Perhaps Miss Nightingale did not speak the words Kay Francis uttered; perhaps she was not always conscious she was doing a noble, splendid thing; perhaps she did not look like Kay Francis. But when a student nurse takes her professional vow, she may remember Florence Kay Francis Nightingale, in her snow-white cap, with her intriguing widow's peak a black point, as she uttered those solemn, serious pledges . . . Whether the first real nurse is overly glorified or not is a moot question. Perhaps it is an authentic biography. Certainly it is an earnest, straightforward picture.

Supplementaries.

Sylvia Froos sings "Love Is Like a Cigarette" in a smooth manner, with an effective background; a troupe of performing dogs and ponies perform difficult stunts; Hunt and Percival toss off some rope tricks; nimble acrobats present Manjean's Rodeo (almost as they gave their act on a downtown stage). All this in one short, which is swift-moving and entertaining.

Paramount News carries items of exceptional interest.

Ann Harding Case Halts.

Reno, Nev., July 24 (AP).—Harry Bannister's motion to set aside modification of a Reno divorce decree which gave Actress Ann Harding, his former wife, exclusive custody of their 7-year-old daughter, Jane, "has been dismissed without prejudice," his attorney, Samuel Platt, said today.

Platt said the "motion can be reopened at any time."

Stars in Musical Comedy at Fox

Long one of the theater's most reliable light comedians, the veteran Ernest Truex, pictured above in a thoughtful mood, pumps renewed life and vigor into the stellar role of "Spring Is Here," the musical comedy providing a motion picture theater innovation by occupying the stage this week at Loew's Fox. Mr. Truex is supported by an able cast of comedians, singers and dancers and a sprightly chorus of Broadway show girls. "Spring Is Here" clicked heavily with yesterday's enthusiastic audiences and reflects credit upon all concerned in its production.

High Hilarity Dominates New Week at Earle

Joe E. Brown a Riot in Comedy of Salesman; Maxine Doyle Hit.

"EARTHWORM TRACTORS." First National picturization of the stories by William Hazlett Upson, adapted to the screen by Richard McCauley, Joe Traub and High Cummings, starring Joe E. Brown, with Guy Kibbee, June Travis, Dick Foran, Carol Hughes, Gene Lockhart, Olin Howland, Joseph Crehan, Sara Edwards, Charles Wilson, William Davidson, Irving Bacon and Stuart Holmes. Directed by Raymond Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

Joe E. Brown has gone hilarious for keeps in this one!

Built up with almost the adroitness in comedy construction and the generation of thrills that might be boasted by a "Safety Last," that uproarious farce of chills and hysterics that brought Harold Lloyd his greatest fame, "Earthworm Tractors" is a convulsing symposium of every ridiculous and exciting thing that could happen to "a natural born salesman" who knew nothing about salesmanship and less about the intricate piece of mechanism he was trying to sell to hard-boiled business prospects.

The action is initiated by Sally Blair's refusal to marry Alexander Botts until he can find something more than a five-cent gadget upon which to expend his vast genius as an irresistible barterer. Happening upon a tractor ad, that is what Alex decides to sell. A straightforward lie or two in a letter to the company wins him a chance to prove his mettle—also the tractor's metal, for the matter of that! Once launched upon the hectic business of trying to subdue a 16-ton piece of machinery he never has seen before, much less ever tried to operate, Alexander encounters a series of misadventures that may be relied upon to terrify and convulse even the most case-hardened audience by quick turns.

First "Flop" Sells Six.

His first "demonstration" of the land Leviathan to a dubious "customer" ends in disaster in the miry depths of a nearby swamp, but sells six tractors to an innocent bystander who was impressed by the many unexpected things a tractor could be made to do! This same astute buyer, incidentally, also thought a bottle of shoe polish was "the best liquor I ever tasted." That will give you a rough idea of the sort of intellect that responded to the Botts brand of salesmanship!

The individual episodes of the story that will rock the week's crowds in typhoons of laughter are too numerous to catalogue, but the one that will cause the loudest shrieks probably will turn out to be the one in which Alexander moves his prospect's house to the wrong end of town for him, said prospect, inside the house by mistake, believing all the time that the earthquake that shook down a city in Tibet finally has caught up with him. A railroad train and a grade crossing add the last gasp to this one.

Joe E. Brown plays the role of Alexander Botts right down to the ground and back again. I have never seen him so funny or his antics so diversified and uniformly lunatic. There is a telephone incident that is a scream and a final race against a series of dynamite blasts that brings the picture to a feverish and romantic close.

While the star comes dangerously near being the whole show, Guy Kibbee turns in one of his best comedy performances, as the dyspeptic lumber dealer, who needs tractors, but won't buy them, and both June Travis and Carol Hughes prove to be competent.

Two Stage Headliners.

On the stage, Maxine Doyle, returning as a "singing single" to the scene of her three-year term of service as mistress of ceremonies, yesterday afternoon completely captivated her audience by an unexpectedly mature and poised interpretation of some especially well arranged song numbers, including "Is It True What They Say About Dixie," "She Shall Have Music," "The Story of Love" and a special chorus of Benny Davis' "I'm Grateful." Each of these popular ballads was cleverly counterpointed with snatches of other hits based on the same or a similar theme and all won Maxine something in the nature of an ovation at the performance reviewed, which happened to be the second of the day. Gowned in flowing white and her hair a little lighter than it used to be, Maxine presented a striking picture of youthful beauty that made it doubly sure she is "going places" in the theater.

Charley Chase, another recruit from Hollywood and a veteran trouper, scored an unequivocal personal hit in a variegated assortment of song, comedy and instrumental specialties in the second headline spot on the bill. Mr. Chase is in especially fine form on this visit and is sure-fire in everything he does. Others on the bill are the Twelve Aristocrats, a double sextet of dancers—six boys and six girls—and Alphonse Berg, a male modiste, who drapes yards of handsome material on two equally handsome models and shows how fashions are born.

An Our Gang comedy, "The Lucky Corner;" a Merrie Melodie cartoon comedy, "I Love to Singa;" "When Fish Fight," a Bimini reel, with comment by Clem McCarthy, and Paramount News complete a bill that will knock the comedy lovers right out of their pews.

"SAN FRANCISCO." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Robert Hopkins, with screen play by Anita Loos, starring Clark Gable and Jeanette MacDonald, and featuring Spencer Tracy, with Jack Holt, Jessie Ralph, Ted Healy, Shirley Ross, Margaret Irving, Harold Huber, Edgar Kennedy, Al Shean, William Ricciardi, Kenneth Harlan, Roger Imhof, Charles Judels, Russell Simpson, Bert Roach and Warren B. Hymer. Music from operas by Gounod and Verdi, with additional music and lyrics by Gus Kahn, Bronislau Kaper, Walter Jurmann, Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed. Dances staged by Val Raset. Directed by William S. Van Dyke. Reviewed (third week) by W. A. Whitney.

Its potential longevity—three weeks at least—eloquently bespeaking the high quality of the entertainment offered, with those other elements of appeal as enumerated in the above italicized paragraph presenting no conceivable deterrent to public appeal, "San Francisco" continues its merry way not only to gladden the cockles of the managerial and public hearts but also to drive another spike in the coffin of the so-called summer slump.

To what was stated in these columns on July 11, as well as before and after, nothing more can be added: The personal and physical investiture of the work and the spontaneous response that has greeted its showing have established it in the theater far better than we might be able to do with the mere use of words.

In short, just read the credits and then draw your own conclusions—and, we venture to say, you will not be wrong.

The supplementary program is excellent, with "Polo," possessing the voice of Pete Smith; "Two Little Pups," a Technicolor cartoon of particular merit, and the Metrotone News comprising the "shorts."

TRUMP MANAGEMENT.

The trump suit is like a fortress sprawled across the card table. Behind it declarer mobilizes his forces and establishes his tricks. That is why the first concern is with the trumps. Get them out of the way and the game can go on. Ignore them and declarer succeeds in his plans.

There are two ways of getting trumps out of the way. Leading them out and forcing them out with side suits. The correct method against a high contract generally is to force them out, against a low contract to lead them out.

Note the devastating effect of the trump leads in today's hand, helped a little by weak play on declarer's part.

North, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 no trump	Pass	2 di (1)	2 sp. (2)
Double (3)	Pass	Pass	Pass

(1) South should have bid two no trump.

(2) A pointless overcall. If East has a fair hand West will make a part-score, if East has a "bust" West will be ruined.

(3) North's game is uncertain, the penalty sure.

North opened the nine of diamonds, dummy covered with the Jack, and South won with the queen. Seeing no threatening side suit, South promptly returned a trump. North won with the queen and returned a low trump, declarer winning with the nine.

West decided to go after the clubs, but North stepped up with the king and returned a diamond. And West made the fatal error of ruffing. A second club lead was taken by the ace, and North cleared all of the trumps. Declarer cashed his club, but then he was through. North had two heart tricks and South's diamonds accounted for the rest.

In all declarer won only three trump tricks and a club. Had he started the hearts instead of the clubs, or had he discarded instead of ruffing the second diamond, a fifth trick could have been brought home.

But, in either case, North and South would have been contented. It pays to give up a nonvulnerable game to collect 500 points. And, if you should ask North and South, they would tell you that it is even better to collect 700 from a careless declarer.

Hail and Farewell.

Detroit, July 24.—Michigan's Attorney General Dave Crowley, sitting with us at the Detroit A. C., told the most amusing story I've heard in years, a case that actually went to the courts. One of the town's auto tycoons drank too much and not too wisely one night reaching the point of complete saturation about 2 a. m. At that point, he decided to go back to his hotel, telling his comrades that he would meet them at his hotel suite whenever they decided to join him. He staggered away, reached his hotel, and promptly collapsed on the bed. His drinking companions, in the meantime, decided to surprise him, a theatrical man in the crowd suggesting that they arouse a troupe of midgets who were in the city and bring them over to the hotel.

BEN BERNIE.

• • • •

This plan having been unanimously and drunkenly seconded, the midgets were summoned, and before you could say Jack Robinson, the capacity of midgets being what it is, the little men were all drunk, too. So they piled into cars, the shrill cries of the midgets echoing plaintively in the darkened streets as the cars rushed along. Arriving at the hotel suite of their stricken companion, they found him asleep on one of the twin beds. "You little fellows get undressed," said the ringleader of the party.

• • • •

"Sneak into his room and when he wakes up, start yelling. It will be very funny."

• • • •

The midgets, their better judgment overruled by several thimblesful of whisky, stole into the room where the auto magnate was slumbering uneasily. With the stage all set, the others called the phone operator and told her to ring the room. The auto magnate came out of a dazed sleep to find a horrifying sight. Twelve midgets were dancing about his room, completely devoid of clothing. One midget was sitting on the foot piece of his bed, making faces at him. Another one was sitting on the chifferobe, squatted in Buddha fashion. And the 14 midgets were singing in chorus, "Ring Around the Rosie."

The auto magnate let out a scream of pure terror at this terrible sight, and then in a frenzy of nerves, he started smashing up the furniture. By the time the house detective had collared him, the room was a shambles, the midgets had fled down the hallway, and his friends had hidden themselves. The hotel sued him for malicious damage, scoffing at his story that 14 little men had invaded his room in the dead of night to sing "Ring Around the Rosie." Crowley, now the Attorney General, was the counsel for the hotel, and called off the action.

• • • •

The auto magnate has not taken a drink since. I do not know about the midgets.

C. F. Talman, Ill, Ends Life In His Home

Author and Meteorologist With Weather Bureau for 40 Years.

Charles Fitzhugh Talman, author and meteorologist for the United States Weather Bureau, shot himself yesterday at his home, 2010 Hillyer place, and died shortly afterward in Emergency Hospital.

The 62-year-old weather scientist was found by his wife about 8 a. m. in the second-floor bathroom of his residence. He was unconscious, a pistol shot in his head, and near him on the floor was the weapon.

Mrs. Talman called the physician who had been attending Talman for the last year, and he ordered the injured man removed to the hospital. He died in the operating room at Emergency Hospital less than an hour later.

Note Addressed to Wife.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

On the bathroom window curtain was pinned a note and an insurance policy. The note, addressed to Mrs. Talman, read in part:

"Darling, please forgive me. Ask Will Ryan to help. He will for Marjorie's sake.

"I ask to be cremated as cheaply as possible."

The note was undated and unsigned.

Talman, who had been in the service of the Weather Bureau for the last 40 years, was born August 31, 1874, in Detroit, Mich. He attended Detroit schools and Kalamazoo (Mich.) College.

He came to Washington in 1900, four years after becoming attached to the Weather Bureau. He held many assignments, including positions at Norfolk, Va., the West Indies, at Boston, Mass., Springfield, Ill., and Buffalo, N. Y. He advanced through the service to his present post of consultant meteorologist.

Author of 2,000 Articles.

At the same time he was doing duties he was engaged in research and scientific writing. He was author of 2,000 magazine articles and books, and for several years was at work compiling a dictionary of meteorological terms. This work had not been finished at the time of his death.

Mr. Talman married Miss Grace Edes, of Washington, in 1909. She survives with two children.

A daughter, Constance Elizabeth Marjorie, was married last fall to Mario Rodriquez, of Chile, who at that time was attached to the Chilean Embassy here. Since then he has been sent to Lima, Peru, and the former Miss Talman is with him there now.

A son, Ensign Benjamin L. E. Talman, is now on duty on the U. S. S. Maryland.

Talman has been in poor health for a year, and for the last month he was on sick leave. He had attempted, however, to carry on his writing and continued to prepare a weekly syndicated article, "Why the Weather?"

He was a fellow of the American Meteorological Society, A. A. A. S., and belonged to the American Geophysical Union and the District of Columbia Library Association.

Rippy Wins in National Public Links Tourney, Goes to Finals

Nats Win, 10-4, Over Browns; Weaver Gives But 4 Safeties

Bolton Hits Homer and Double to Share Honors of Day.

Griffs Bang Out Total of 16 Hits

Caldwell Is Victim of Attack in 5-Run Spree in 9th Inning.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

St. Louis, July 24.—The goat turned hero for the Nats today and they won a ball game.

Stocky little Cliff Bolton, whose shoddy catching had been plaguing the Nats all afternoon and threatened to nullify the splendid four-hit pitching of Monte Weaver, made the transition from bumhood to heroism with one screaming home run wallop in the eighth inning that provided the impetus of the 10-to-4 victory over the Browns.

Bolton had permitted the Browns to tie the score at 1 to 1 in the second inning, when he dropped one of Weaver's pitches. He let the Browns get away with a double steal in the sixth inning, when they tied the score again at 2 to 2, and he cheated the Nats out of a run in the seventh, when his slowness of foot saw him nipped at the plate on an attempt to score from third.

That was not all. In that seventh inning when the Browns forged to the front, 4 to 2, it was another stolen base that put one of the Brown's precious runs in a position to score.

But came the eighth inning, and Bolton redeemed himself in a grand manner. The Nats were trailing, 4-2, when they went into the inning. A single by Joe Kuhel buoyed their hopes, which sagged immediately as Stone hit into a force play. Up they went again as Travis singled to right, and down they went once more when Reynolds hit into a force play.

Thus with two out, Bolton stepped to the plate. Into the very teeth of a gale blowing from center field he rammed a terrific line drive that landed far up in the center field bleachers for a home run that tied the score and put the Nats in a 5-4 lead.

It's Bolton Again.

And that wasn't all. In the ninth as the Nats set about to bolster Weaver's slender lead with a new barrage against Earl Caldwell, it was Bolton who provided the most dynamic blow—a line drive double to center field that drove two more

The Olympic committee may reinstate Eleanor Holm Jarrett, backstroke swimming champion, dispatches from Germany said yesterday after her teammates pleaded her cause. She was suspended for drinking and late hours on board ship. She, herself, tearfully begged that the suspension be lifted, saying, "I know I have been drinking too much and I'm all wrong."

Team's Pleas Lift Mrs. Jarrett's Chances for Reinstatement

tan was warped to the pier, and lasting almost until nightfall in alternately rain-drenched and sun-splashed settings, the men and women, garbed in their attractive Olympic costumes, were virtually "welcomed to death."

After hearing her appeal, Dr. Raycroft said the decision which dropped her from the team must stand.

"I'll never touch another drop of liquor," Mrs. Jarrett told the Associated Press. "All I want is one more chance to show I can take it and make good.

Hopes for Chance.

"I talked for an hour with committeemen on the train from Hamburg, but I feel they are unwilling to change their minds unless addition pressure is brought to bear.

"Nothing I can say now alters the fact that I have taken it on the chin. But I haven't taken the final count yet. I still hope I will be given another chance."

Although Brundage's action was backed up by Raycroft's committee during the three-hour train ride from Hamburg, officials and athletes alike were torn by conflicting personal opinions.

Few coaches were as outspoken as Lawson Robertson, head of the men's track and field forces, who declared, "Mrs. Jarrett is getting a rough deal," but Olympic committee members such as Dr. Graeme Hammond, Col. Pierre Lorrillard

Eleanor Not Child, Says Mr. Jarrett

New York, July 24 (AP).—Declaring he saw nothing wrong in his wife's drinking champagne if she wanted to, Art Jarrett, band leader husband of Eleanor Holm Jarrett, said today he was "greatly disappointed" American Olympic officials had barred his wife from the Olympic swimming team.

"It may have been necessary for the morale of the team," Jarrett said, "but it means the loss of the best swimmer on the team."

"Eleanor isn't a 10-year-old any more," her husband said. "She's been around long enough to know how to handle herself. She always seems able to win even if she doesn't go in for the heavy training of those athletes."

He added:

"They ought to give some more of those swimmers champagne. Maybe they could win a couple of races."

Quist to Play In Davis Cup Matches

By the Associated Press.

London, July 24.—Battle lines were drawn today for the challenge round of the 1936 Davis Cup tennis competition starting tomorrow between the cup-holding English team and Australia.

Machine-like H. W. (Bunny) Austin, who has been a big factor in England's last three successive cup conquests, will open the best three out of five series against the veteran Jack Crawford.

They will be followed on Wimbledon's famed center court by the recognized world amateur champion, Fred Perry, against the Australian champion, Adrian Karl Quist. For the final singles matches on Tuesday the players will swap opponents.

Naming of Quist at the official draw today occasioned some surprise. Quist twisted his ankle in the inter-zone final against Germany's Gottfried Von Cramm last Saturday and was forced to withdraw from the remainder of the competition.

The Anzac titleholder's doctor ordered him to take a ten-day rest and it was deemed unlikely he would be fit enough to participate in Australia's final bid to capture the cup for the first time in 17 years.

It was expected his place again would be taken by Vivian McGrath. However, Quist practiced at Wimbledon this morning to see how the ankle would hold up.

Track Meet Called Off.

The Southern Conference playground track meet scheduled yesterday was postponed because of rain. Assistant Playground Supervisor Richard S. Tenyson did not set a new date, but said the meet will be held during the week of August 2, at Eastern Stadium.

Coach Flays Olympic Heads For Ousting of Eleanor Holm

By the Associated Press.

Laguna Beach, Calif., July 24.—R. L. "Dink" Templeton, veteran track coach at Stanford University, joined in the Eleanor Holm Jarrett controversy today, aiming sharp criticism at the American Olympic committee for dropping the swimmer from the team.

"I fear," said Templeton, vacationing here, "that the Olympic committee, as has been their wont, dared the young lady with threats and Eleanor is not a gal to take a dare.

"It is unfortunate that a true reflection of the difference between the committee and the athletes, who are looked upon as prize livestock and taken to Europe to be exhibited for the benefit of the august American Olympic committee, had to be brought to light in this conspicuous manner.

"But it will probably be patched up, and should be a means of closer understanding between the two classes of free tourists, only one of which earns its way, while the other holds the whip hand."

Boston Wins, 7 to 4, Over Tigers

Foxx Hits 27th Homer as Detroit Drops to Third Place.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, July 24.—The Boston Red Sox pulled the Tigers out of third place in the American League and into a tie for fourth today by coming from behind to win a 7-to-4 10-inning decision over the world's champions with a 3-run rally in the extra frame.

The result enabled the idle Chicago White Sox to take third-place in the loop, and brought the Red Sox out of the second division.

Jimmy Foxx belted his twenty-seventh homer in the eighth with none on base, and his mates pulled up to a tie in the ninth when Marvin Owen's error, singles by Dusty Cooke and Mel Almada, and Doc Cramer's long fly produced two runs.

The Tigers scored all their runs off Johnny Marcum, the Sox starter, but found Jack Wilson too tough to solve. Gehringer's homer started the scoring in the fourth. In the next inning, consecutive doubles by Gerald Walker and Al Simmons, followed by Glenn Myatt's single added another pair. Singles by Myatt and Gehringer brought in the last Detroit run in the eighth.

Tigers' Jinx Even Hits Flag Raising Ritual

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, July 24.—Misfortune that has dodged the Tigers all season prevented them from raising their first world championship flag at Navin Field today. A defeat by the Boston Red Sox further marred the ceremony.

The American League pennant was hoisted without mishap, but a gust of wind caught the huge world championship flag—18 by 36 feet in dimensions—when it was half way up the flagpole in center field. The rope snapped and the flag fluttered to the ground as the crowd of 15,000 gasped. It will be raised tomorrow.

Jay Berwanger, Shakespeare Lead Vote

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 24.—The starting halfbacks in the Collegiate All-Star-Detroit Lions football game to be played the night of September 1 at Soldiers Field likely will be Jay Berwanger, former Chicago flash, and Bill Shakespeare, the Notre Dame ace.

Today's tabulation of votes in the poll being conducted by 182 newspapers showed Berwanger leading the halfback field with 459,728 ballots and Shakespeare second with 456,284. With the poll ending at midnight Saturday, Andy Pilney, now in third place, has 368,517 votes.

The 11 players receiving, by position, the greatest number of ballots, will start against the professional champions.

Today's leaders:

Ends—Millner (Notre Dame), 458,256; Toppins (Stanford), 399,738; Loebs (Purdue), 381,486; Peters (Notre Dame), 367,514.

Marathoner Is Pacified; Team Discord Quieted

Berlin, July 24 (AP).—Further discord over the relations of the "associate" coaches and the American Olympic team apparently were removed tonight when the marathon runner, Ellison (Tarzan) Brown consented to remain with his teammates in the Olympic village without having his coach, Jack Farrington, present as he desired.

Tarzan served an ultimatum on board ship that he must live with his coach, who is barred from living in the village along with other coaches who are not on the official staff.

Indians Drub A's to Gain On Yanks

Win, 16 to 3, and Draw Within 7½ Games of New York.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 24.—The Indians fired their heaviest hitting barrage of the season at the helpless Philadelphia Athletics today, and picked up half a game on the American League lead with a 16-to-3 victory.

They smashed out 22 hits, including Earl Averill's seventeenth homer, to score in every inning but the fifth and pull up to 7½ games behind the idle New York Yankees.

Denny Galehouse, the Tribe's starting pitcher, held the A's to seven hits for the seven innings he worked. Young Bob Feller, the 17-year-old rookie, took over the job for the last two frames, and after a feeble start held the Mackmen helpless.

The Indians found the offerings of Dusty Rhodes and Rookie Flythe easy to solve, getting 13 hits off the former and nine in the three innings Flythe was on the mound.

In addition to his homer, Averill hammered out a pair of triples and a single, stretching his consecutive game hitting streak to 19. Hal Trosky continued his to 18, and Roy Weatherly to 16.

Singles by Odell Hale and Weatherly, and Averill's first triple started the scoring with two runs in the opening frame. Joe Vosmik's hit and Roy Hughes two-bagger brought in another in the second. In the third, Hale's double, triples by Averill and Billy Sullivan, and singles by Weatherly and Vosmik produced four more runs. The Tribe also had big innings in the sixth and seventh, scoring three times in each frame.

Lindbergh Visitor At Olympic Camp

Peers Into Kitchens; and Sprints on Track.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, July 24.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh stole a march on the United States Olympic team today.

Going to the Olympic village, he prowled into every corner, peered into the kitchens, visited the swimming tanks and even sprinted gaily along the training track.

Then he disappeared before his fellow-couuntrymen, the newly arrived athletes, poured in.

But before he left he told the village commandant:

"You German army people certainly think of everything!"

Rain Washes Out Card Of National Loop Tilts

Boston, July 24 (AP).—Rain completed washing out today's National League baseball program by forcing postponement of the game between the Cincinnati Reds and Boston Bees after one half of the first inning had been played.

Earlier the weather had forced postponement of the Cardinals game in New York, the Cubs at Brooklyn and the Pirates at Philadelphia.

U.S. Welcome Sets Record In Berlin

Germans Cheer Busloads of American Girls on Olympic Teams.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, July 24.—The American delegation to the eleventh Olympic games today received the most rousing of any of the other 23 nations thus far arrived.

Rain failed to mar the Hamburg ceremonies conducted on shipboard before loading the athletes into two special trains for the three-hour trip to the capital.

Everywhere the Stars and Stripes mingled with the swastika while Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic committee, as chief orator for the visiting athletic army, reciprocated warm greetings and praised Germany's Olympic spirit. He said he welcomed the opportunity to match America's best athletes against the competitors from over 50 nations.

The welcome given the Americans not only was enthusiastic but it was marked by tremendous crowds at all points along the route from the railroad terminal to the Olympic village.

Not even Eleanor Holm Jarrett, the beauteous New York swimmer who was expelled from the team for violating training regulations, was overlooked by autograph seekers despite the fact she was attired in street dress in contrast to natty uniforms worn by her former teammates.

Residents seemed pleasantly impressed with the snappiness and dapperness of the American Olympic uniform. Straw hats, almost unknown in Germany, caused quite a commotion.

Above all the American women caught the fancy of Berliners, who cheered themselves hoarse as two omnibuses of pretty girls hove in sight.

Claude Rippy Makes History For Golfing Stars of District

By a Staff Correspondent.

Bethpage Course, Farmingdale, Long Island, July 24.—Claude Rippy, the young Washington clerk, who migrated to the District five years ago from Shelby, N. C., today made golf history as far as Washington, D. C., was concerned.

Rippy became the first District golfer to reach the finals of a national championship, thus overshadowing the great efforts of Roland Mackenzie, one-time Walker Cup star, and George Voigt, a product of Washington's public links.

The Ripper's victory in today's semifinals was the occasion for a flood of telegrams from Washington admirers, many of whom left last night to attend the finals.

At least 40 Washington rooters will be on hand to see him play Pat Abbott in tomorrow's finals for the municipal crown.

Rippy today said he owed much of his success to his faithful caddy, 17-year-old Ray Randazzo, who has yet to give him the wrong club. The kid is just uncanny that way, and Rippy never disputes his word once he requests a club. Rippy has been short on several greens, but he is yet to overshoot one.

This is Rippy's third flight in the National Public Links Championship. He failed to qualify at Pittsburgh in 1934, and lost to Mike Stefanchick, Gary, Ind., steel worker, last year at Indianapolis. A few weeks ago he burned up the East Potomac course in 274—a new all-time Middle Atlantic amateur record—10 under par, to retain his District municipal golf championship.

Rippy has been keeping in great shape all week, eating four healthy meals, drinking lots of milk shakes and munching chocolate bars while on the golf course.

His Harding Cup teammates—Ted Burrows, Bobby Burton and Pat Axtell—have been taking care of the Ripper at a farmhouse about three miles from here. He sleeps like a horse at night, so tired is he, according to Burrows.

Among the telegrams received by Rippy was one from Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina. S. G. Leoffler, District Public Links concessionaire, who sponsored the Washington trip, arrived in town tonight to see tomorrow's finals.

How the two finalists in public links championship advanced:

Claude Rippy defeated Ralph Strafaci, Brooklyn hairdresser, 5 and 4; Louis Cyr, Portland railroad man, 5 and 3; Kammy Lau, Hawaiian champion, 2 and 1; Johnny Lucas, Sharon, Pa., steel worker, 4 and 2; Walter Greiner, Baltimore Business College student, 6 and 4.

Pat Abbott defeated Bill Kinkella, Seattle electric singn repair man, 4 and 3; Alex Banazek, Syracuse first-aid man, 3 and 2; Dominick Soccoli, New Britain, Conn., service station owner, 5 and 4; Donald Erickson, Los Angeles newspaper circulation manager, 2 up; Bruno Pardee, New Haven, insurance salesman, 8 and 7.

District Ace Beats Greiner, 6 and 4 In Semifinal Play

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Bethpage State Park, Farthingdale, Long Island, July 24.—Consistency and a sound game from tee to cup had their reward today for Claude Rippy, 23-year-old Washington golf star, who played with the nerve and verve of a seasoned champion to enter the finals of the National Public Links championship.

The District's "Ripping Ripper," as he is known around here, ran true to form in his scheduled 36-hole semifinals match with Walter Greiner, 18-year-old business college student from Baltimore, routing the Monumental City stripling, 6 and 4.

Rippy's smashing, impressive conquest of young Greiner—a struggle for the Washington boy, despite his wide margin of victory—earned him a crack at Pat Abbott, 24-year-old movie extra and actor from Altadena, Calif.

Rippy and Abbott will match skill tomorrow over the 6,751-yard stiffly trapped tree-studded blue course of Bethpage, firing first at 8:30 a. m. (Eastern standard time) and returning for the final 18 holes at 1 p. m.

Abbott Wins, 8 and 7.

Just as Rippy was convincing in his victory over Greiner, so was the six-foot, 135-pound curly haired boy from Southern California when he crushed Bruno Pardee, 36-year-old New Haven insurance man, under an avalanche of pars and birdies, 8 and 7.

These two young men were among a record starting field of 222 golfers when the qualifying battle opened Monday. Tonight they were the only survivors and tomorrow night only one of the two will be wearing the crown which Frankie Strafaci, of Brooklyn, lost in the mad scramble of the "quick death" rounds Wednesday.

If Rippy wins tomorrow—and there are hundreds at Bethpage who think he will—he will have defied tradition.

Rippy, with his sterling 145, tied Jim Molinari, the San Francisco radio cop, for the medal, and a medalist seldom wins a tournament. That 75-70 included a new world record of 30 for 9 holes, and ordinarily a golfer who shoots such uncanny golf would blow up in the match play.

Only 11 Over Par.

But not Claude Rippy. Already he has played five matches and a grand total of 130 holes. During

Allison Won't Defend His Net Title

Champion Able to Play, Says Doctor Here After Examination.

Despite announcement by his physician, Dr. William Marbury, of Washington, that he is in condition to play tennis at any time, Wilmer Allison, national singles champion, told the Associated Press yesterday that he will not defend his title in September.

Allison rushed to Washington after arriving from Europe Thursday in order to submit to a physical examination by Dr. Marbury. The champion had asserted that an injury to his right leg, which he said he suffered during the North American zone final with Australia last month in Philadelphia, was handicapping his play.

He also had been reported as suffering from a back injury in the region of the sacro-iliac joint.

"Nothing Serious."

Dr. Marbury, however, explained that Allison has been bothered by a recurrence of the after effects of a serious appendicitis operation of several years ago which required a drain following removal of a ruptured appendix. The serious effect of the operation left a weakness, the physician said, which caused a "pull" in the region when Allison exerted himself.

"It is nothing serious," Dr. Marbury said. He added that the examination showed no evidence of a leg or back injury.

Asked whether Allison is in physical condition to play tennis and defend his championship, Marbury said, "I don't see why not."

The doctor gave the champion a belt to support the aggravation, which he said would probably "relieve his mind." Allison left for New Jersey, presumably to play in the Seabright tournament starting next week.

Able to Play.

Dr. Marbury said Allison is able to play tennis immediately if he wishes. The champion, however, expressed the belief he will need an operation but not before he returns to his home in Austin, Tex.

Allison's assertion that he is "through with serious tennis" follows several other predictions of similar vein. Last season, after threatening to retire following the poor showing of the American team in the Davis Cup finals with Great Britain, Allison entered the National singles and battled his way to the championship, beating Sidney Wood in the finals after eliminating Fred Perry in the semifinals.

The 31-year-old ace said there was a possibility he might pair with John Van Ryn and play in the doubles championship this year. Van Ryn and Allison won a year ago and also held the crown in 1931.

Allison's failure to reach top form this year brought on much speculation as to whether the captain would be left off the American team and his position taken by Bryan Grant, of Atlanta.

The amiable Texan has been a factor in American tennis since he won the intercollegiate title in 1927. He paired with Van Ryn to take the Davis Cup doubles engagements in 1929 and 1932. He has been first in the National rankings for the last three years.

Max Baer Scores Kayo In 1st Round of Battle

Ogden, Utah, July 24 (AP).—Max Baer, former world heavyweight boxing champion, wound up his comeback conditioning tour with a first round knockout of Bob Williams, of Houston, Tex., in a scheduled four-round bout at a pioneer day celebration here today. Baer scaled 217; Williams 225.

Buddy Baer floored Fay Ferrecki, of Pasadena, Calif., also in the first round. Each weighed 245.

Good Flavor Tastes Victory by Nose in Nantasket Purse Race

GallantPrince Brings 2d Money

Gelding Smashes From Behind to Field to Pay $10.20.

By the Associated Press.

Suffolk Downs, Boston, July 24.—Hitting the wire almost together, Houghton P. Metcalf's Good Flavor bested the Belair Stud's Gallant Prince in a hairline finish in the mile and 70-yard Nantasket Purse today before a crowd of 11,000.

The gelded son of St. James received a sung ride from Jockey Grigg and had to smash from behind to gain the victory while turning the route distance in 1:43.3 to pay $10.20.

Gallant Prince was favored and brought $3.40 to place. Old Comrade finished third, a length off the second horse, holding that spot by a length and a half over A. G. Tarn's Faust to pay $5.40 for show.

Home Loan Leads.

Freddy Smith had Home Loan away in front of the field and going to the clubhouse turn he was closely attended by Shansi. Bahamas was third with Gallant Price fourth on the outside.

Gallant Prince made his move at the three-quarter pole. Down the back stretch Home Loan, Shansi and Gallant Price race head and head, with the latter finally drawing away on the far turn to a good lead.

Turning for home Good Flavor loomed on the outside and went to the lead with the others dropping back in the long drive down front. Grigg held his horse together well and he was able to gain the nod from the judges.

Gyral Wins.

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—The Chicago owned Gyral came with a rush on the outside at Arlington Park today to win the feature event at one mile.

Jockey Eddie Arcaro held the winner in restraint during the early stages and then made his move to win by two lengths from Eddie Johnson's Masterpiece, the early pacemaker. Mrs. John D. Hertz' Her Reigh, the favorite, took third money.

Gyral, owned by Charles W. Bidwell, ran the distance in 1:37 4-5 and paid $7.40 to win, $4 to place and $3 to show. Noble Star, from the T. C. Worden stable, broke down after the field had gone two furlongs and had to be carried off in the track ambulance.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLAKEEN, $21.60, $6.40, $4.20; COL. BIXER, $3.60, $2.60; CALAVERAS, $3.80.

BLAKEEN followed in close pursuit of the pace, moved up on the outside and, closing gamely through the stretch, wore down COL. BIXER despite bearing out at the end. COL. BIXER drew clear in the first three-sixteenths, opened up a good lead, saved ground at the stretch turn and, despite holding on gamely, was not good enough. CALAVERAS dropped back steadily after breaking alertly, was unable to keep up in the run down the backstretch, though closing determinedly in the final drive. PAUL JUNIOR, outrun early, moved up leaving the backstretch, though never able to endanger the leaders. MAIDEN DREAM had early speed, retiring in the last five-sixteenths. INTRODUCTORY was far back all the way. MARY STENSON was never prominent.

SECOND RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For maiden 2-year-olds. Start good for all but Romney Royal. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:53. Off at 2:57. Winner, A. G. Weston's b. g. (2), by Constitution—Valentia. Trained by R. W. Mitchell. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23, 0:46 2-5, 1:07.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—AMHURST, $25.00, $9.60, $5.20; AVENAL, $7.80, $4.60; TOOTHPICK, $4.00.

AMHURST, away in motion, drew away into a good lead, was rated along in front under slight restraint and, holding on willingly, held AVENAL safe. The latter, slow to begin, responded gamely to pressure and closed with good energy in the stretch run. TOOTHPICK improved her position gradually and closed with good courage in the stretch run. COBE, devoid of early speed, made up some ground in the last three-sixteenths. JAMESVILLE forced the early pace and faltered in the last furlong. MOON HARVEST, well placed and under urging early, was unable to keep up. ROMNEY ROYAL was practically eliminated at the start when he was away poorly, trailing the entire way.

WEATHER, RAINING.

THIRD RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:25. Off at 3:33½. Winner, Mrs. L. E. Ames' gr. h. (6), by Stefan the Great—Memories II. Trained by John Brouse. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:47 2-5, 1:12 3-5, 1:41, 1:47 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GUARDIAN, $5.90, $3.20, $2.60; TRUE CHARM, $5.20, $4.20; POLLY DEAR, $4.60.

GUARDIAN, unruly at the post, was started outside the stalls, took command in the run to the first turn, opened up a long lead gamely, fought off a determined challenge inside the last furlong and outgamed TRUE CHARM at the end. TRUE CHARM, under reserve for the first six furlongs, moved up stoutly when called upon in the stretch, made a bold bid to reach the winner, but was not good enough. POLLY DEAR, in nearest chase of the winner at the start, fought it out gamely to the end. BYE BYE MARY moved up on the outside down the backstretch, was carried wide into the stretch and faltered in the final drive. HOOSIER'S PRIDE moved up menacingly on the inside at the stretch turn when the leader went wide and was unable to make up any ground under pressure through the last three-sixteenths. MORALIST, away slowly, was outrun.

DAILY DOUBLE (FIRST AND THIRD RACES) PAID $51.40.

FOURTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-old fillies. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:03. Off at 4:06. Winner, W. H. Laboyteaux's b. f. (2), by The Scout—Parco. Trained by C. Mesilli. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:46, 1:06 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PARSCOUT, $23.00, $9.00, $4.20; PEGOTTY ANN, $3.20, $2.40; †BERGERE, $2.40.

PARSCOUT, away fast, followed in closest pursuit of PEGOTTY ANN until reaching the stretch, wore the latter down when called upon and drew out steadily through the last furlong. PEGOTTY ANN, hustled to the front at the close of the opening three-sixteenths, was never able to draw clear. Dickey was of little help. BERGERE came through on the inside and closed gamely in the stretch run. MAKALAW showed good early speed, dropping back after leaving the backstretch. BRAVE AGNES was unable to improve her position. PARIS MODEL, well placed early, stopped badly.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,200. The Nantasket Paragon Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:36. Off at 4:42. Winner, P. P. Metcalf's b. g. (4), by St. James—Pepsin. Trained by M. Smart. Value to winner, $825; second, $225; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:47 2-5, 1:12 3-5, 1:39 3-5, 1:43 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOOD FLAVOR, $10.20, $4.20, $3.20; GALLANT PRINCE, $3.40, $2.80; OLD COMRADE, $5.40.

GOOD FLAVOR, permitted to drop back in the first quarter mile, moved up on the outside nearing the far turn, worked his way forwardly gradually thereafter and, closing with a rush, was up in the concluding stride. GALLANT PRINCE moved into a good lead in the run down the backstretch, saved ground into the stretch and, holding on willingly, just failed to last. OLD COMRADE, a trailer for the first six furlongs, moved up on the outside and closed a good gap. FAUST, restrained early, moved up on the inside nearing the far turn, though unable to improve his position thereafter. BAHAMAS and HOME LOAN showed good speed, faltering after going five furlongs. JOHN WERRING stopped badly.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:11. Off at 5:14½. Winner, Mrs. M. J. White's ch. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ALL FORLORN, $5.80, $2.60, $2.20; RED WAGON, $2.40, $2.20; SINGING HEART, $2.20.

ALL FORLORN followed in closest chase of the pace, moved up on the outside of RED WAGON nearing the stretch, fought it out courageously, getting up in the concluding stride. RED WAGON took command at once, drew clear in the first quarter mile and, steadied along in front, responded willingly to punishment and just failed to last. SINGING HEART, well placed, though unable to keep pace with the first two, continued with good energy to the close. PITTER PAT was outrun throughout. SATRAPAL was unable to reach the leaders.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:43. Off at 5:46. Winner, Mr. C. Pendergast's b. f. (4), by Bulldog—Plucky Lady. Trained by W. R. Flemming. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:47 3-5, 1:12 4-5, 1:38 2-5, 1:45 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PLUCKY BABY, $16.00, $7.60, $4.40; SAND WRACK, $5.80, $4.20; BLIND BROOK, $4.00.

PLUCKY BABY, restrained close to the early pace, wore down BLIND BROOK for the command, drew out and was never seriously threatened through the last furlong. SAND WRACK moved up gradually in the last three furlongs and closed with a rush through the stretch. BLIND BROOK took command at once, drew clear in the run to the first turn and steadied along under slight restraint, faltered slightly in the closing three-sixteenths. CAP, restrained close up, saved all possible ground, made a bid nearing the stretch and dropped back in the drive. LADY FLINDERS displayed good speed, retiring in the last five-sixteenths. MARPAL, on the outside going down the backstretch, was never prominent.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:13. Off at 6:14½. Winner, Mrs. J. J. Dolan's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RONFALON, $14.80, $7.00, $4.00; MARCLEAVE, $3.80, $2.60; STILL ALARM, $3.40.

RONFALON, away fast, was taken back of the pace, moved up gradually in the last half mile, took command in the stretch and hard driven, held sway to the end. MARCLEAVE was rated along back of the pace, disposed of MISS SUBWAY for the lead, though unable to cope with the closing challenge of the winner. STILL ALARM, outpaced for the first six furlongs, saved ground in the stretch and closed with good energy. MISS SUBWAY displayed the most early speed, opened up a good lead and faltered in the last quarter mile. LIGHT HEELED never could reach the leaders and dropped back steadily after leaving the backstretch.

Polish Olympic Team Loses Shot Champion

Warsaw, July 24 (AP).—Zygmunt Heljasz, former Polish shot-put champion, was dropped today from Poland's Olympic team because of an infraction of rules.

Heljasz, who tossed the 16-pound ball 15.99 meters (52 feet 4¾ inches) in the tryouts, finished ninth in the 1932 Olympic at Los Angeles. His suspension created quite a stir in the Polish press, the papers taking sides for and against the action of Polish sports authorities.

Fort Hoyle Wins Over-Time Polo Match From Harrisburg Club

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

St. Louis, Mo., July 24.

That four-hit pitching performance against the Browns today is reason enough to bring up again the case of Monte Weaver, who seems to have miraculously recaptured the pitching skill that stamped him the prize rookie of 1932.

Today's masterful effort by Prof. Weaver, the retired member of the University of Virginia faculty, followed hard upon the heels of his feat in bringing to an end the nine-game winning streak of the Cleveland Indians in Washington last week; which followed hard upon a sensational seven-inning relief shift against the White Sox that first served to give notice that a new Weaver was in the Nats' midst.

OVICH.

For two years he was a hopeless case. An incurable vegetarian, he disregarded physicians' orders to partake of the meat necessary to provide the strength that is a prerequisite to a man out there attempting to pitch approximately 150 balls on a given afternoon. He lost weight, he lost stamina, his fast ball lost its hop, he lost ball games and he lost his job with the Washington club.

He had been a great pitcher back there in 1932 after Clark Griffith had paid the Baltimore Orioles $25,000 for his contract after personally scouting him in the International League. In his first big league effort, at the fag end of the 1931 season, he beat the White Sox, 2-1, allowing only four hits.

The next season, 1932, he was a positive sensation. The 20 games he won that year placed him in the category with the few other freshman pitchers, notably Wes Ferrell, who were able to win 20 games in their first season in the big leagues. Monte had everything—a fast ball, a curve, control, and he knew how to pitch.

He was a strapping 180-pounder then, the personification of pitching speed. Through 1933, he again was a winner, helping the Nats to the pennant and then losing perhaps the best-pitched game of the World Series against the Giants, a 2-1 affair with Fred Fitzsimmons, which was decided when Weaver failed to field Fitzsimmons' bunt cleanly.

And then in 1934, he fell upon evil ways. Steadily he lost weight as he embarked upon a rigid vegetarian diet in the ignorance of club officials. They counted it as an off-year for Monte, but when he reported to training camp the next season at 145 pounds, they were alarmed, issued strict orders.

But he couldn't win in 1935 and in midseason they sent him back to the minors—to Albany. He couldn't win consistently there, either, but in the spring of 1936, they brought him back again.

They brought him back because baseball is that way. Good pitchers are scarce and they remembered Weaver for what he had done. They remembered, too, that he knew how to pitch, which is an asset that too many pitchers now on big league pay rolls do not. If Monte ever regained his strength and his stamina.

But Weaver was unimpressive at the start of the 1936 season, and none too strong. Manager Harris virtually gave up on him and he languished on the bench. There, in his idleness, he gained weight and strength. And when finally they used him in a relief role in an emergency he blossomed as a new Weaver, or rather, the old Weaver.

Monte weighs around 170 now and he's the same good pitcher who was the talk of the league in 1932. The hop is back on his fast one; he always did have control, and he is pitching winning baseball as the box scores testify.

Monte, himself, explains it very simply:

"I just feel better out there these days. When I cut my fast ball loose I know it's got something on it. And it helps my curve, you'd be surprised. I throw 'em both with the same motion, and the hitters have got to guess. It was tough on me when my fast ball went bad. They'd lay back there and wait for it and my curve was never good enough to get by on alone. I was up against it, against curve-ball hitters, but now I can throw 'em something they don't like. It's a lot more fun."

Post's Summer Camp Fund Swelled by Fight Profits

Managing Editor Alexander F. Jones of The Washington Post has just received a check from Promoter Joe Turner, left, and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn for half the profits of the Barney Ross-Phil Furr fight last Wednesday night. The money will go to the Summer Camp Fund for underprivileged children sponsored by The Washington Post. The fund will realize from its share of the profits and a contribution from Clark Griffith of one-third of the rental of his stadium for the bout the sum of $1,800—the largest amount ever received in Washington on a similar benefit promotion.

Eastern Net Stars Score In Tourney

Carolyn Roberts Upsets Miss Wheeler; Parker Outlasts Foe.

By the United Press.

Chestnut Hill, Mass., July 24.—Eastern tennis stars rallied brilliantly against a threatened Western sweep today to blast their way into the finals in three divisions of the Longwood Bowl Championships.

Unseeded Carolyn Roberts, of New Rochelle, N. Y., provided the biggest upset of the day by eliminating second seeded Grace Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Calif., in straight sets, 6—3, 8—6. Tomorrow she battles for the women's singles crown against top-seeded Alice Marble, of Los Angeles, who continued her sensational comeback spurt by erasing Dorothy Bundy, also of Los Angeles, 3—6, 6—0, 7—5, after a stern struggle.

Parker Triumphs.

In a marathon battle interrupted by rain, top-seeded Frankie Parker, of Lawrenceville, N. J., exhausted 17-year-old Joe Hunt, of Los Angeles, 13—11, 6—3, 6—0. His opponent in the men's singles final tomorrow will be young Bobby Riggs, of Los Angeles, national claycourts champion, who gained the bracket Thursday by eleminating Walter Senior, of San Francisco, 6—4, 6—2, 6—2.

Western Pair Wins.

The West was assured of the men's doubles championship when the top-seeded combination of Riggs and Wayne Sabin, of Hollywood, eliminated Wilmer Hines and Bunty Lawrence, both of South Carolina, 3—6, 6—4, 7—5, 2—6, 9—7; and the second-seeded pair Hunt and Henry Culley, of Santa Barbara, downed Gardner Mulloy, Miami University, and Paul Guibord, Dartmouth College, 5—7, 7—5, 2—6, 6—2, 7—5.

Scott Leader In 12-11 Win Of Army

Winners to Meet Third Cavalry's Yellows Sunday for Title.

It took the son of a general, Lieut. Bruce Scott, to lead Fort Hoyle, of Maryland, to a thrill-packed 12-to-11 victory over the West Shore Country Club, of Harrisburg, Pa., yesterday and into the final round of the United States Southeastern polo championships. Scott's 3 goals in the last chukker, including 1 in an extra period, won the match.

The pace was fast and furious and the score was either deadlocked or close to a tie from this point to the finish. With the start of the last chukker, the teams were tied at 9-9, but Lieut. Scott came through with a long shot to put the Artillerymen ahead.

A few minutes later, Scott again scored from a difficult angle, but Frownfelder and Lieut. L. T. Hempt came back to tie the count for Harrisburg at 11-11 as the regular playing time ended.

From a scrimmage near the sideboard, the struggle moved toward the Harrisburg goal and out of a helter-skelter of players, young Scott drove through his winning goal to break up the game.

Maj. Swing figured largely in the Fort Hoyle victory, staving off numerous sallies by the Pennsylvanians in the late chukkers with fine saves and directing the offensive strategy, which time and again ended with the able Scott accounting for the goal. Frownfelder stood out especially for the civilian team, which justified its pre-tourney rating as a dangerous dark horse."

Harrisburg, Pa.	Position.	Ft. Hoyle, Md.

Fast Field Set For Doubles Tourney

California Stars Sign to Play at Army, Navy Club.

A fast field is rapidly signing up for the annual Middle Atlantic doubles championships starting Wednesday on the courts of the Army and Navy Country Club.

Eugene Smith, of Berkeley, Calif., and Charlie Carr, No. 7 ranking player of southern California, comprise the latest visiting team to challenge for the title now held by Barney Welsh and Ralph McElvenny.

Smith's chief bid for fame last year was his winning the Canadian national singles championship. He is ranked No. 3 in the northern California rankings behind J. Donald Budge and Worth Oswald and ahead of Robert Harman and Walter Senior.

While Welsh will not be defending his title, McElvenny will be among the starting field, possibly aligned with Gilbert Hunt, former ntational intercollegiate runner-up to Gene Mako. Entries are coming in to Gene Hermann, club professional, and Maj. Charles W. Christenberry, tournament chairman, in a number betokening a record field for the event.

The Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association, having jurisdiction over West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland and the District, will send the team from its section getting the farthest in the tournament to the national championship.

Entries close Monday at 6 p. m. Entrance fees are $3 per team and must be mailed to Army-Navy Country Club, P. O. Box 154, Arlington, Va., care of Gene Hermann. All matches will be for the best three out of five sets.

Weaver, Bolton Star, Nats Win

Five runs clattered across the plate in that inning as the Nats collected the last half dozen of their 16 hits against Caldwell.

It was a masterful performance by Monte Weaver that inspired the Nats to victory. The lank right-hander, now apparently in complete recovery of the skill that formerly ranked him as one of the outstanding pitchers of the circuit, stuck to his task throughout a series of discouraging errors by his mates.

Browns Take Lead.

With the score tied at 2-2 in the seventh, Weaver saw the Browns take the lead without benefit of a hit, as his infield made three errors behind him.

Buddy Lewis was the first offender, contributing a two-base error on Hemsley's tame grounder that rolled through his legs. Hemsley was out at third on Carey's bunt, and Caldwell sacrificed Carey to second. Carey reached third on an error by Kuhel, who tried to pick him off second. Weaver walked Lary and then Lary stole second. Travis muffed Clift's grounder and Carey scored, putting the Browns in a 3-2 lead. Ultimately Solters singled to score Lary and make it 4-2.

Those were the figures when Bolton arrived at the plate in the eighth with two on base. You should a-seen that home run he socked.

Detroit Team Takes Bowling Congress Cup

Berlin, July 24 (AP).—The Stroh-Bohemian Beer team from Detroit won the Max Schmeling Cup today in the International Bowling Congress.

Americans continued their series of victories in the tournament, finishing first and sixth in the three-man event, the Detroiters winning the event, and the United Bowling Clubs of New York coming in sixth.

District Swim Stars Engage In 2 Meets

Men to Face Navy Team at Annapolis Today; All-Stars Vie Tomorrow.

Washington swimmers face a heavy schedule today and tomorrow. This morning the pick of the city's men swimmers leaves with A. Earle Weeks, chairman of the District A. A. U. swimming committee, for Annapolis, where they will match strokes with the Naval Academy team.

Tomorrow Washington's men and women paddlers will face the invasion of an All-Star Baltimore team at Maryland Club Gardens, in the fourth annual meet for the Mayor Howard Jackson trophy. The Capital swimmers have two legs on the handsome cup offered by the Baltimore executive, and need only a victory Sunday to annex permanent possession of it.

Rivaling, if not outshining the inter-city event, will be the junior national high board diving championships for women. At least three crack visiting divers will be turning and twisting for the title and several Washington girls. Whether Marie Duval, District indoor and outdoor champion for several years, will compete was not definitely known yesterday.

Miss Farwell Tops List.

Florence Farwell, of the Shoreham, will lead the Washington entry list. Constance Renninger, of the Penn A. C., Philadelphia, Middle Atlantic champion; Betty Rhoads, of the Newark A. C., and champion of New Jersey, and Barbara Cook, of the Colonial Club of Jeffersonville, Ind., are the leading out-of-town entries.

The Washington team swimming the Naval Academy today will line up as follows: 50-yard free style, Buddy Hodgson, Shoreham; 100-yard free style, Bob Jordan and Joe LaSalle, Ambassador; 220-yard free style, Kenneth Kinsella, Boys Y. M. C. A., and Harvey Deering, Northeast Boys Club; 100-yard backstroke, Paul Wilson, Y. M. C. A., and Jack Kreamer, Northeast Boys Club; 100-yard breaststroke, Knox Moncure, Y. M. C. A., and Paul Wilson, Y. M. C. A.; 200-yard relay, Hodgson, Justin Farrell, Y. M. C. A.; Deering and LaSalle.

The local team will line up the same way against Baltimore Sunday, except that there will be no 50-yard race. Harry Cranston, unattached, and John Marshall, Metropolitan Police Boys Club, will compete in the diving and the relay will be over the 160-yard distance, with Ronald MacMillan, of the Shoreham, replacing Deering.

Nation-Wide Ban Urged On Waterfowl Huntnig

Pierre, S. Dak., July 24 (AP).—The State Game and Fish Department today recommended to the Federal Biological Survey that hunting of migratory waterfowl be prohibited throughout the United States this year because an "alarming loss of ducks" has occurred during the past week.

Ira N. Johnson, chief of Biological survey, said that despite the efforts of volunteer conservationists to rescue and transfer young ducks from dried sloughs and marshes to larger bodies of water the losses of ducklings in some sections are reported as high as 90 per cent.

All-Star Sandlot Called; To Be Played Monday

Rain called a sudden halt to the all-star game between teams representing the Columbian Athletic League and the Washington Boy's Club League Insects at Griffith Stadium yesterday. The game will be played at 2:30 Monday.

The Columbian A. L. Midgets will play today, when the Kennedy Service youngsters meet the Sealfon Pharmacists, at 11 a. m., and the Lyon Villagers face the Benning A. C., two hours later, on No. 1 Monument diamond.

No. 5 Wins Title.

The Fifth Precinct Police Boys Club won the championship of the Veterans of Foreign Wars peewee baseball league yesterday by trouncing the Fourth Precinct team, 10 to 4, on the Navy Yard diamond. Cole hit two doubles, each one with the bases full, to drive in the six runs which provided the margin of victory. O'Hannon's home run was also helpful.

Manor Ladies Play.

Mrs. H. P. Brown won the medal play with handicap tournament for women, held yesterday at the Manor Club. Mrs. Brown had a handicap of 28, for a net of 74. Mrs. C. P. Medley shot a 96 and had a handicap of 11, for an 85, to take second place.

Teammates Plead For Mrs. Jarrett

as well as Dr. Raycroft were in favor of tempering the decision.

Contrasting with Robertson's view was the feeling of others voiced by Dean Cromwell, University of Southern California track coach.

"She asked for it," he said. "In fact, she begged for it. If it just had been one time it would have been different, but it had been going for a week.

"Of course I feel sorry for her now like everybody else, but it's her own fault. We cannot get the reputation for being 'boozers.'"

Asked if it would have been possible for the ship to refuse to serve her drinks, Cromwell replied; "Yes, that was tried, but she said she was free, white and 22 and demanded them."

The athletes, including some who had been critical of the swimmer's conduct on shipboard, signed the petition asking Brundage to give her another chance. Members of the womens' swimming team were unanimous among the signers.

"Deserved Punishment."

"She deserves punishment for misbehavior, but many of us feel she's being made the goat for other but less conspicuous offenders against disciplinary orders and training rules," one athlete remarked.

Brundage, however, stood firmly on his decision.

"We had no alternative in the circumstances," he said. "None regrets the necessity for such drastic action more than I and my associates who considered all possible grounds for leniency and found none on the basis of the reports from the chaperone, team managers and physicians. Mrs. Jarrett forced our hand and I don't see how we could have escaped censure if we acted otherwise."

Mrs. Jarrett complicated plans to return by train to Bremen by flatly announcing her determination to remain in Berlin. Arrangements have been made for a passage for her to return to the United States in the liner Bremen sailing tomorrow.

The committee, however, agreed to finance her temporary stay in a Berlin hotel while she cabled her actor-singer husband, Arthur Jarrett, that she is "hoping against hope" for her uniform and place on the team will be restored.

Despite an obviously adamant attitude of the Olympic committee from Brundage on down the line, Mrs. Jarrett remained the No. 1 unsolved problem with all hands awaiting otherwise on adjustments for resumption of training after a five-day trip.

Good Matches On Parks Net Card Today

Nate, Allie Ritzenberg Will Meet; Stocklinski and Deck in Semifinal.

A galaxy of torrid matches bedecks the Public Parks tournament schedule today with Nate and Allie Ritzenberg heading the bill. Following the singles semi-final between Pat Deck, No. 1 seeded player, and Ray Stocklinski, seeded No. 3, Nate and Allie will go hunting for the doubles championship in the final round of the team event.

Big Herb Shenkin and the well-equipped Stocklinski will provide the opposition. The match will start at 3 p. m. and so much are the Ritzenbergers counting on winning the title that they asked special permission to have the doubles staged ahead of their singles semi-final.

Rather than take on Shenkin and Stocklinski after a gruelling singles struggle they are preferring to play their singles match in the somewhat fatigued state which is more or less certain to follow the doubles. Nate is the choice to win the singles, despite the fact that Allie has proven himself the better tennis player, in this tournament at least.

Allie has swept through to the final round without losing a set while Nate has stumbled past one obstacle after another, losing a few sets in the process. Allie's so-called inferiority complex when playing Nate is the reason the latter is the slight choice to win. Nate, 19 years old, has never lost to 17-year-old Allie in a tournament match.

The Stocklinski-Deck affair should provide a battery of fireworks. The match will start at 1 p. m. with Deck, a steady veteran, matching strokes with one of the smoothest stroke-makers in the city, but who is sometimes hampered by lack of cool match temperament.

Nate and Allie are slated to take the court for their singles battle at 5 p. m. The singles final will be held tomorrow at 3 p. m. with the women's finals at 2 p. m and the women's doubles final at 4:30 p. m.

The only women's match today finds the veteran combination of Sara Moore and Dorette Miller meeting young Willie O'Steen and Joan Bransford in a semi-final doubles encounter.

All matches were postponed yesterday because of rain.

Elite Giants Back For Home Series

Meet N. Y. Black Yankees at Stadium Tonight.

First half winner of the Negro National Baseball League, Washington's Elite Giants, the greatest colored club ever to represent the Capital, returns to Griffith Stadium tonight.

The Giants will begin a three-game series with their bitterest rival, the second-half league leading New York Black Yankees.

Tonight's game begins at 8:30 o'clock and tomorrow's double-header at 1:45. The locals expect two of the largest crowds of the season. This will be their first appearance here since winning the first half title.

Fred (Speedball) Portner will pitch for the Elite Giants, while Jess Holland is the Black Yankee choice

Lawson Little Ties, Sets Mark in Vancouver Golf

Vancouver, July 24 (AP).—Orville White, a seasoned campaigner from Chicago, and young Freddie Wood, of Vancouver, led the field in the qualifying round of the Jubilee $5,000 Open golf tournament today with 36-hole totals of 137, but it was Lawson Little, former British and American amateur king, who provided most of the day's fireworks.

Little equaled the course record with a 64 on his second round today and set a record of 29, eight under par, for the outgoing nine. He clipped another stroke off par early on the incoming nine but slipped on the seventeenth and wound up with 35. Little shot a 78 for his first round yesterday, giving him a total of 142.

runs across the plate after Ossie Bluege had driven in a pair with a single to center and Joe Kuhel had driven home the first run of the inning with a double against the right field screen.

Five runs clattered across the plate in that inning as the Nats collected the last half dozen of their 16-hits against Caldwell.

It was a masterful performance by Monte Weaver that inspired the Nats to victory. The lank right-hander, now apparently in complete recovery of the skill that formerly ranked him as one of the outstanding pitchers of the circuit, stuck to his task throughout a series of discouraging errors by his mates.

Browns Take Lead.

With the score tied at 2-2 in the seventh, Weaver saw the Browns take the lead without benefit of a hit, as his infield made three errors behind him.

Buddy Lewis was the first offender, contributing a two-base error on Hemsley's tame grounder that rolled through his legs. Hemsley was out at third on Carey's bunt, and Caldwell sacrificed Carey to second. Carey reached third on an error by Kuhel, who tried to pick him off second. Weaver walked Lary and then Lary stole second. Travis muffed Clift's grounder and Carey scored, putting the Browns in a 3-2 lead. Ultimately Solters singled to score Lary and make it 4-2.

Those were the figures when Bolton arrived at the plate in the eighth with two on base. You should a-seen that home run he socked.

Insane Interviews.

(to-wit, Bunny Berigan)

Tuh-wah, tuh-wah, tr-r-r-ra-a-at!

"But Mr. Berigan, is that cricket?"

Bunny of the hot trumpet sat with his legs crossed in a corner of a C. B. S. studio, munching carrots between trumps.

"Ha!" said Berigan, "that's Bach. Only I swing it. Listen to me swing the Organ Prelude and Fugue."

"Mr. Bunny, I came here from La Musica, America's only non-existant music periodical, to interview you on the more serious aspects of the three B's."

"The three B's? Let's see. There's Bunny and Berigan and . . . Who's the third?"

"You embarrass me, sir. The three B's are Bach, Beethoven and Brahms."

"Oh, sure enough. Rodgers and Hart wrote a song about those fellows:

'Two wrote symphonies and one wrote psalms,

Bach, Beethoven and old Johannes Brahms.'"

"What do you think of the 'Appassionata' Sonata, Mr. Bunny?"

"I think it's spinach unless you swing it."

"Unless you what, sir?"

"Swing it. Like this. Tuh-ra-a-a-wah-oot!"

"Oh."

"Why don't you hang around until Saturday night and hear my men in a healthy jam session on the air."

"I think I had better practice my scales."

"Did you ever hear this?"

"Sounds terrible."

"You asked for it. It's the Bourree from the Second Violin Sonata, Bach's, you know. I think old J. S. would like it better the way we do it."

"Do you know 'Is it True What They Say About Dixie?'"

"Sure. I heard Stokowski do it last night with the Philadelphia Orchestra."

"Can I quote you on that, Mr. Bunny?"

"What's the name of that song, I mean that sheet, you write for again?"

"La Musica, America's only . . ."

"Oh, yes. Well, you can go back and write that I said swing music is the three B's of dance music. And movement you'll find he wrote that kind of music, too. And so did Mozart. Only in those days they did the minuet and the polka, which had their own kind of swing. Excuse me."

Tuh-wah, tuh-wah, tr-r-r-a-a- att!

Chrysler Corp. Lifts Dividend To $4 Per Share

Previous Disbursement, Paid on June 30, Was $1.50.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 24.—Overshooting by a wide margin the peak earnings of the boom years, Chrysler Corporation reported today the largest profits in its history for the June quarter and first half of the year.

With release of the figures the company also established a record in dividend payments by ordering a distribution of $4 a share on the capital stock. This will involve a distribution of more than $17,300,000.

For the six months the consolidated net profit was $29,473,736, equal to $6.83 a share, after all interest, taxes, depreciation charges and after providing for surtax on estimated undistributed profits. This compared with $18,659,309 in the first half last year or $4.31 a share.

Net profit in the June quarter soared up to $18,020,297, equal to $4.18 a share from $11,453,439, or $3.65 a share in the three months ended March 30 and $9,496,127 or $2.19 a share for the June quarter last year.

Chrysler's previous biggest quarter was the final three months of 1935 when $11,791,362 of net income was reported.

Earnings for the June quarter this year were almost double the $9,257,000 shown for the similar period in 1929, which ranked close to the top mark of Chrysler earning power during the boom years

Harvester Increases Common Rate to $2.50

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—The International Harvester Co. today raised the dividend basis on the common stock to $2.50 a year, the rate that prevailed prior to 1932. The company had been paying dividends on its common stock at the rate of $1.20 a share.

Directors declared a quarterly dividend on the common stock of 62½ cents a share and a further dividend on the common of 97½ cents to bring the three previous quarterly payments up to the same rate. Both dividends were made payable October 15 to stock of record September 19.

Retail Advertising Gains 9.8 Per Cent

Chicago, July 24.—Despite the severe heat wave which afflicted a large part of the country, retail advertising lineage in the newspapers of 66 major cities showed a substantial increase over 1935 levels during the 7-day period ended July 11, Advertising Age reported today.

During that week retailers placed a total of 14,135,277 lines of display advertising in the newspapers of these 66 cities, an increase of 9.8 per cent from the 12,872,996 lines carried during the corresponding week of 1935.

June Sales Twice May On Local Exchange

The dollar value of sales on all registered securites exchanges in June amounted to $1,447,926,966, an increase of 1.1 per cent over the value of sales in May and an increase of 13.4 per cent over the value of sales in June, 1935. Stock sales, had a value of $1,164,147,431, a decrease of 4.8 per cent from May. Bond sales were valued at $283,772,216, an increase of 36.0 per cent. Total sales of stock in June were 43,937,284 shares or 6.0 per cent below May's figure. Total principal amount of bonds sold was $332,383,475, an increase of 33.2 per cent.

June sales of stocks and bonds on the Washington Stock Exchange were $259,474, or more than double the May total of $121,721.

$50,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that tenders are invited for Treasury bills to the amount of $50,000,000, or thereabouts. They will be 273-day bills; and will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders.

Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve banks or branches up to 2 p. m., Monday. Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department.

Grains Slump With Outlook For Heavy Rain

Corn Drops Nearly 3 Cents a Bushel and Wheat 2 Cents.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 24.—Nearly 3 cents a bushel corn market break late today followed official predictions of widespread heavy rains tonight and tomorrow in drought-ridden North Central States.

Wheat fell 2 cents, responsive to corn weakness. Accelerating the tumble of corn values were assertions that the feeding ratio for corn had become unprofitable, and that cheap Argentine imports were being offered in the East for later arrival.

Corn closed unstable at almost the bottom point reached, 1⅝@2⅝ cents under yesterday's finish, July, 90⅞; September, 87⅛@87½; December, 80¼@80⅝. Wheat, 1½@2 cents down, July, 1.03; September, 1.03½@1.03⅝; December, 1.04⅛@1.04⅝. Oats ⅝ to 1 cent off, September 36½@36⅝. Rye, ½@1⅝ up; September, 72⅝. In provisions, the result varied from 2 cents decline to an equal advance.

Seaboard Air Line Promotes G. B. Rice

Norfolk, Va., July 24.—George B. Rice, nationally known railroad man, has been appointed chief freight traffic officer of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, with jurisdiction over the freight, express, agricultural and industrial departments.

Because of ill health, Charles R. Capps, chief traffic officer, retires after 48 years of service, according to an announcement made today by L. R. Powell, jr., and Henry W. Anderson, receivers.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Improve After Uncertain Start; Steel and Farm Shares Strong; Wheat Lower.

New York, July 24.—Stocks developed a firmer tone after an uncertain opening and closed with moderate gains throughout. Turnover was around 1,400,000 shares. Bonds were stagnant in the upper reaches and commodities were a little tired. September wheat closed 1⅝ lower at 103⅝ cents a bushel.

Two fresh developments were presented for stock market nourishment, but neither appeared to alter greatly the course of trading. One, the higher rate for overtime pay announced by the United States Steel Corporation, was partially discounted as certain favored news sources were given the news by the corporation before the close of trading yesterday, but to the majority the news was not available until after 3 o'clock. The other, the Landon speech of acceptance, while approved for its content in Wall Street, contained nothing startling enough greatly to stimulate trading. It drew the lines a litle closer in the election campaign and disclosed what generally was considered good strategy, but it will require a little time for good results to be shown.

Steel Wages Advance.

As for the steel industry, the Steel Corporation's action was given two interpretations. One was that, having the prospect of further business improvement, preparations were being made to insure a good labor supply. That interpretation seems to be rather too easy, for it looks to be a good long time before there will be any pinch of labor shortage in the steel or any other industry. It would be a nice bull point for the markets if in truth the country were running so close to a labor shortage that it had to offer special wage inducements in advance as a precaution. Too many millions still are out of work to make that view the popular one.

What apparently is going on is that the steel corporation (probably to be followed by the other steel makers) is offering a little gravy to its employes as an answer to the unionization efforts of the Lewis faction of organized labor. Reports have been current for a long time of higher wages. This, in effect, will mean higher wages for those employed in steel, so long as a good rate of operations is maintained.

Financial markets on the whole followed their course of the last two months, with little change in volume. They have a propelling force of too much business improvement, and, more recently, the prospect for stocks of larger dividend distributions, to be greatly upset by the political campaign. Meanwhile the odds and ends of the business news continues on the side of higher prices.

Freight Loadings.

Numerous favorable items came to hand today. Railroad freight car loadings for last week prove to have fallen a fraction of 1 per cent from the previous week, but they were nearly 22 per cent higher than for the corresponding week of a year ago. A private estimate of automobile production for this week was placed at 99,329 units, compared with 97,768 in the previous week. The rise over a year ago was around 22 per cent. Some further increased and extra dividends were announced and numerous corporations reported higher earnings for second quarter and the first six months. The Department of Commerce reported a considerable increase in employment and pay rolls for June.

Tension in Spain continues, but affairs there have as yet had only limited repercussion on our markets. Dollars perhaps owe some of their current firmness to demand created by the spread of communism in Spain.

After early weakness the steel shares hardened and gave the market its tone. Steel common sold above 65 and Youngstown made a new high price rung. Railroad shares were fractionally higher at their best, but trading volume was sharply reduced. In the first three hours, for example, only one sale of Santa Fe took place. Delaware & Hudson was the high scorer of the day. Pennsylvania lost ground.

Farm implement shares climbed 1 to 4 points, probably for the same reason that grains were set back. Rains in the dry country were counted upon to help farm income, even at the expense of a temporary setback in wheat prices. Sugar stocks gained more ground, 1 to 2 points being the rule, on their increasing profits. The airplane group also moved forward. Bendix and Douglas were prominent.

Motor shares were rather neglected and oils were mixed. Public utilities got nowhere in particular, with the exception of Telephone. Coppers continued irregular and disinclined to grow buoyant over the latest attempt to put up metal prices.

Stock Movements.

Philip Morris rang the bell by selling above 100. Its final rise was easy, the last four sales being 99, 99¼, 99½ and 100. Three sales at the even figure brought another half-point gain. . . . Bethlehem Steel was quick to announce that it too was preparing a schedule of time and a half pay for overtime. Presumably the higher wage schedule was decided upon by all the leading steel companies as a concerted measure directed against the unions. . . . Wall Street doesn't think the higher overtime pay for the steel companies will mean an actual increase in operating expenses for the next few months, at least. Steel shares were a strong feature of the market. . . . Boeing's strength pleased its brokerage-house friends who recently have been recommending it to their clients.

Credit.

This week's Federal Reserve system statement and the New York Reserve report show again that credit in use is declining, in spite of the professed fears of the Reserve Board that inflation is taking place. Total Reserve Bank credit in use for the week dropped $12,000,000, circulation fell $37,000,000, the monetary gold stock rose a little and excess reserves climbed $63,000,000. Brokers' loans were down $8,000,000, although the market improved a little. New York City banks reported a sharp drop in commercial loans.

Reserve Buying Bonds.

It did not escape attention that the Federal Reserve banks this week added $9,000,000 more Government bonds to their portfolios, which, together with $2,000,000 notes, offset an $11,000,000 run-off in the system's holdings of Treasury bills. Whether in search of earning assets or for some other reason, the Reserve system seems to like bonds, for this is the second sizable acquisition, $50,000,000 having been added to the banks' portfolio, presumably through conversion, in the week which ended June 17. The new purchase was divided, apparently by some mathematical formula, among all the regional banks.

Pepco Profits For 6 Months Increase 9.4%

Washington Gas Light Co. June Net Declines From Last Year.

Potomac Electric Power net earnings improved substantially in June and in the first six months of 1936, according to the financial statement filed yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission. Operating revenues in June totaled $1,124,755.36, an increase of $67,610.14, or 6.4 per cent, over June, 1935.

At the same time revenue deductions for expenses called for $693,608.05, an increase of $36,678.71, or 5.58 per cent, over the same month last year, leaving a net operating income of $431,157.31, a gain of $30,931.43, or 7.73 per cent.

Deductions from gross were $4,558.32 more than in June a year ago, leaving a total net income in June this year of $341,713.60, in comparison with $317,711.65 in June, 1935, a gain for the month of $24,001.95, or 7.55 per cent.

The company's operating revenues for the first half of 1936 amounted to $6,993,961.54, a gain of $451,003.18, or nearly 7 per cent over last year. Revenue deductions for operating expenses took $4,244,983.14, a rise of $208,760.05, or 5.17 per cent, leaving a net operating income of $2,748,976.40, a gain over last year of $242,243.13, or 9.66 per cent. Non-operating income was $15,000 lower than last year. Deductions from gross for interest and dividends required $598,942.23, up $37,621.36, or 6.70 per cent.

This left a net income for the first half of 1936 of $2,205,357.67, which is a gain of $189,568.13, or 9.41 per cent, over the first six months of 1935.

Washington Gas Light Co.

The monthly report of the Washington Gas Light Co., filed with the Public Utilities Commission yesterday afternoon shows net operating revenue for June of $75,379, compared with $135,250 for June of last year, a decrease of $59,871.

Operating revenue for June 1936, $454,208, compares with $479,426 for June a year ago, a decrease of $25,218. Operating expenses, including taxes and uncollectible bills, increased $34,653, this year's figure being $378,829, against $344,176 in June 1935.

Non-operating revenue for June this year increased $22,525 over last year's figure of $16,557 to $39,082, resulting in a gross corporate income of $114,461, which compares with $151,807 for June, 1935, or a decrease of $37,346.

Interest deductions of $81,026 for June, 1936, were $9,179 more than last year's figure of $71,847, resulting in a net income of $35,435 this year compared with $79,960 last year.

Georgetown Gaslight Co.

The monthly report of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. also filed with the Public Utilities Commission yesterday, shows a net loss of $1,763 for the month of June, 1936, as compared with a loss of $4,187 for June last year. Operating revenues in June, this year, were $84,044 as against $85,954 for June, 1935, a decrease of $1,910. Operating expenses, including taxes and uncollectible bills decreased $2,246, this year's figure being $84,069, against $86,315 for June, 1935.

Non-operating revenue was $250 more this year than last year, resulting in a gross corporate income of $4,702, compared with an income of $4,116 for June, 1935. Interest deductions decreased $1,838, this year's figure being $6,465, against $8,303 for June, 1935.

Curb Tone Firm; Oils in Demand

New York, July 24 (AP).—Swinging high, then low, the curb market closed mixed to slightly better today. Oil shares were firm throughout and showed fractional gains over the previous close. Support was accorded utilities and leaders held steady while some industrials and specialties tended to slip off moderately.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass ran forward 4⅝ points to 131⅛ and Union American Investment jumped 4¾ to 35¾. Bridgeport Machinery advanced 2 to 19 and Sherwin-Williams picked up 1¾ at 139¾. A gain of ⅝ was scored by Gulf Oil. On the down side, Fansteel fell 1¾ to 12¾ and Cleveland Electric Illuminating 1 to 51. Other losses were fractional.

Life Policy Sales Rise Sharply in June

Hartford, Conn., July 24.—Life Insurance sales in the United States made their best showing during June of any month this year, according to the Life Insurance Research Bureau. Sales were 10 per cent of those for the same month in 1935. The improvement is emphasized by noting that sales for the first six months of this year were 8 per cent below those for the same months in 1935 and for the 12 months ended June 30, 1936, they were 4 per cent below those for the year ended June 30, 1935. These bureau figures came from companies having more than 90 per cent of the ordinary life insurance in force in the country.

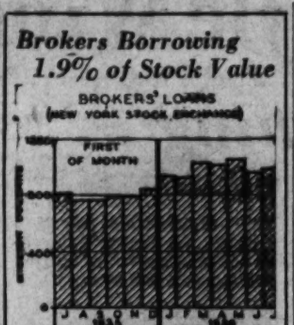
Brokers Borrowing 1.9% of Stock Value



Boston, Mass., July 24.—Brokers' loans increased slightly the past month, although still below the total of March, April and May. The ratio of brokers' loans to the value of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange is 1.94 per cent, the same as last month.

1935 Autos Valued At 3.32 Billions

New York, July 24 (AP).—American motor manufacturers produced 4,119,811 motor vehicles last year, which, with replacement parts, tires and accessories, had a total wholesale value of $3,319,497,973, the Automobile Manufacturers Association announced today.

The industry's 1935 operations, both from the standpoint of the number of units produced and the value of output, were at a level almost 200 per cent above the depression low of 1932, the association disclosed.

Directly and indirectly, more than six million workers derive their incomes from occupations in connection with the manufacture, merchandising and operation of motor vehicles, the association says.

Two Arrested At Rally Denied Second Trial

Judge Mattingly Cites Telegrams Sent by the Anti-Fascists.

Although he was charged by the District League Against War and Fascism with denying John Thomas, 23, and Margaret Adams 19, their constitutional rights at their original trial last week when they were found guilty of violating a police regulation forbidding the giving out of handbills in the street, Police Court Judge Robert E. Mattingly yesterday refused the pair a new trial.

The two were charged with handing out circulars advertising a radical meeting to persons who came to Griffith Stadium at the Democratic rally on President Roosevelt's acceptance of the nomination for President. At their trial, Judge Mattingly accused them and their attorney of being Communists and urged them to leave this country and go to Russia, if they were not satisfied here.

In refusing a new trial, the judge mentioned receiving telegrams from the League Against Fascism. One wire read:

"The American League Against War and Fascism vigorously opposes your illegal procedure in sentencing Thomas and Adams before completion of testimony because of your interpretation of their political beliefs which are irrelevant to the case. This Fascist court procedure violates all constitutional guarantees of civil rights and fair trial. We demand new trial for Thomas and Adams."

Judge Mattingly read an editorial from a Washington newspaper criticizing his handling of the case and defended his action before he read his opinion refusing the pair a new trial.

Anglo-Egyptian Pact Is Reported

Cairo, Egypt, July 24 (AP).—A military clause of an Anglo-Egyptian treaty, understood to contain important concessions to Great Britain, was signed today after weeks of negotiation.

Although no official statement was made, political sources said the principal features were believed to be:

1. Gradual reduction of the British army in Egypt, but only after the Egyptian army has been strengthened.

2. Considerable increase in the British royal air force strength in Egypt;

3. Creation of an important British naval base at Alexandria;

4. Construction by Egypt of strategic roads to allow British troops to move through the country rapidly if necessary.

Weather Conditions.

U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Weather Bureau.
Washington, Friday, July 24—8 P. M.

Forecast for the District of Columbia—Fair Saturday; Sunday mostly cloudy, probably showers; not much change in temperature; gentle northwest and north shifting to east winds.

For Maryland and Virginia—Fair Saturday; Sunday mostly cloudy, probably showers; not much change in temperature.

Conditions.

The disturbance that was cenhral over Indiana Thursday night has moved northeastward to the lower St. Lawrence Valley, Father Point, Quebec, 29.40 inches, and a broad trough extends thence southwestward to Virginia. Another disturbance is moving southeastward over the middle Missouri Valley, Sioux City, Iowa, 29.54 inches, and pressure remains low thence northwestward to extreme northern Alaska, with centers as follows: Medicine Hat, Alberta, and Fort Smith, District of MacKenzie, 29.58 inches and Point Barrow, Alaska, 29.68 inches. Pressure remains high from Newfoundland eastward and southward over the ocean, Cape Race, 30.36 inches, and St. Georges, Bermuda, 30.18 inches, and along the Pacific Coast, Northhead, Wash., 30.20 inches, and it is relatively high from Hudson Bay southward to Michigan and over the extreme South, Churchill, Man., 30.10 inches; Pensacola, Fla., 30.04 inches and Ludington, Mich., 29.94 inches. General showers have occurred from the Ohio Valley and the lower Lake region eastward to the Atlantic Coast, and local thundershowers have occurred in southern Louisiana, the northern Plateau and northern Rocky Mountain region and the extreme upper Mississippi Valley. The temperature has fallen in the Lake region, the upper Ohio and upper Mississippi valleys, the middle Atlantic and the north Atlantic States and the far Northwest, but it continues abnormally high almost generally west of the Mississippi River, except in the Pacific States. Maxima of 100 degrees or higher were registered this afternoon from central Montana southeastward to southern Illinois, southern Missouri and northwestern Arkansas. The highest temperature reported was 114 degrees at Concordia, Kans.

1. Find the apartment that meets your requirement—in the section in which you want to live.

2. Note the key letters and the number at the end of the ad. For example: D-5.

3. Then find the letter of the alphabet (in this case, D) at the top of the map. This means the apartment is located somewhere between the D at the top and the D at the bottom of the map.

4. Then look for the numeral (in this case, 5) at either side of the map. Where the D and 5 meet is the vicinity in which the apartment is located.

FUNNY ABOUT THE PHANTOM SWORDSMAN, CATCHING SHOTGUN ASLEEP ON GUARD AND ONLY CUTTING HIS SHOESTRINGS
BUT THE MIND OF A CRAZY MAN TAKES FUNNY TWIGTS
THINK I'LL TAKE A SWING AROUND TO WHERE I THOUGHT I HEARD HIM THE OTHER NIGHT

WHAT WAS THAT? SOUNDED LIKE IT CAME FROM THE ROW OF TENTS WHERE THE BOYS ARE SLEEPING!
SO STEALTHY IS THE APPROACH OF THE PHANTOM SWORDSMAN THAT EVEN THE YOUNGSTER ON GUARD IN THE TENT HEARS NOTHING!

Dr. Ralph Dela Smith, pastor, will preach tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock at the Woodside Methodist Church on "God and the Outsiders." Special music, under direction of Dorothy Radde Emery, will accompany the services.

"The Pearl of Great Price" will be the subject of the Sunday morning sermon at Marvin Methodist Church tomorrow. In the evening, the pastor, the Rev. Charles Carroll Burrus, will speak on "Human Need" at vesper services.

In the absence of the Rev. Edward G. Latch, pastor, the Rev. Harold G. Snape, formerly of Springfield, Mass., will conduct services tomorrow at the Chevy Chase Methodist Episcopal Church. The Rev. Mr. Snape formerly had charge of the work of the Good Will Industries in Springfield.

The Rev. O. W. Brittingham, of Alexandria, Va., will preach tomorrow night at the McKendree Methodist Episcopal Church, and the pastor, the Rev. Samuel E. Rose, will occupy the pulpit at the morning services.

The Rev. Percy Crittenden will preach tomorrow at the 11 o'clock service of the Cavalry Methodist Episcopal Church. At the 7:30 services two delegates of the Massanetta Conference of Young People will make their reports and hold an echo meeting.

The Rv. Walter Franklin Atkinson, pastor of the Dumbarton Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, will speak tomorrow morning on "The Value of Miracles." The sermon is the second in a series, "Things Fundamental."

The Rev. J. Luther Neff, pastor, will speak tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock on "The Tree of Life" at the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church.

"When Life Becomes Difficult," fifth of a special series of Sunday morning sermons, will be the topic of the message tomorrow morning by Dr. H. W. Burgan, of the Hamline Methodist Episcopal Church. There will be no evening service.

Foundry M. E. Church. Dr. G. Ellis Williams, district superintendent of Methodist Episcopal churches, will occupy the pulpit tomorrow morning. His sermon is entitled "Handicaped, But Not Defeated."

Dr. Eddy Lucius Ford, director of religious education in the church, will speak on "Some Modern Chinese Apostles" at the evening service. Dr. Ford is president of the board of trustees of the Chinese Community Church.

Petworth M. E. Church. "Can We Be Christians Today" is the question the Rev. Robert L. Wood, pastor, will discuss at one-hour evening services beginning at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow. The young people will have charge of the first half of the program. Carroll Mallonee will preside. Margaret Koerner will give a brief address and Mrs. Dorothy Goodrich Reed, violinist, will be soloist.

At the morning worship Mr. Wood will preach on "The Doors of Life."

Calvary M. E. Church. Dr. Frank Steelman, pastor, will preach at 11 a. m. on "The Sweep of the River."

English Pastor Will Preach Today

The Rev. George Gascoign Grieve, minister of the Highgate Hill Unitarian Church, London, England, will preach at the union service at 11 a. m. tomorrow in All Souls' Church, Unitarian.

Mr. Grieve will speak on "The Underived Ought."

In the United States as a Hibbert scholar at Harvard University, the guest preacher is a graduate of Manchester College, Oxford University. Co-operating with All Souls' Church in this service are the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church and the Universalist National Memorial Church.

Cleveland Minister Heads Bible Session

Dr. C. W. Butler, Cleveland, Ohio, was announced yesterday as leader of the newly founded Bible conference which will be a part of the evangelistic camp meeting near Mount Vernon, Va.

The Rev. John Paul, president of the John Fletcher College, University Park, Iowa, is directing the tabernacle services, three of which are planned for tomorrow. Dr. Paul will be one of the speakers. The Rev. Dr. Willia Caffrey, woman evangelist who has conducted campaigns in India and in South America, also will deliver a Bible message.

Truth Is Subject Of Lesson-Sermon

"Truth" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist tomorrow. The Golden Text is from Psalms 57:3: "God shall send forth His mercy and His truth."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "By mercy and truth iniquity is purged: and by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil." (Proverbs 16:6).

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "There is neither place nor opportunity in Science for error of any sort. Every day makes its demands upon us for higher proofs rather than professions of Christian power."

Vision and Victory Dr. Brodie's Topic

Dr. Andrew Melrose Brodie will speak tomorrow morning at the 11 a. m. services of the First Congregational Church on "Vision and Victory."

The Women's Bible Class of the church will meet at 9:45 with the Rev. J. Arthur Winn as leader. The subject will be "Can We Believe That Life Does Not End?"

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

"Sky Man," a drypaint by James A. Allen and one of the recent gifts from the Chicago Society of Etchers to the National Gallery of art. The weekly broadcast tomorrow of the Smithsonian Institution and of the Office of Education features the art treasures of the gallery and gossips about the artists. The etchings go on public display in September.

There was a recent announcement from the Navy Department about the strange dearth of icebergs at this season of the year, but the fate of the polar ice-chips is only one of many things that the Navy follows on the sea to record for the protection of its own ships and those of commerical companies.

Augustine B. McManus, senior nautical engineer and chief of the section of pilot charts in the division of maritime security in the Hydrographic Office, told the other day about all the other aids to navigation that the Navy operates.

His own office is a busy place, with reports from 5,000 or more shipping and sailor men coming in from all parts of the world, giving information about currents, winds, derelicts, shoals and wreckages, as well as icebergs.

These reports are correlated and anything unusual is rushed to the naval broadcasting system and ships at sea are notified immediately to look for this or that which might mean disaster to them. If the news is not of the rush order, it is put into a daily news sheet, which is circulated to the 20 branch offices of the Hydrographic Office and thence to seamen, and in addition to these two services, McManus compiles a weekly sheet telling all the news of the sea of aid in navigation or reporting unusual occurrences that sailors should know about.

"Our system works in this fashion," McManus said; "if, for instance, there is derelict floating off the New York Harbor shore and a master sights it, he radios to us and we immediately broadcast it on wave lengths that can be picked up by all the ships in the area.

"The work here was started primarily to safeguard naval vessels, but it also protects the merchant marine and others."

It is McManus' job, too, to collect information from "bottle papers," or those papers giving exact location which are thrown overboard at various parts of the world in sealed bottles. In this way he has a check on ocean currents and their velocity, and all that information goes down on charts to aid the men at sea.

The Bureau of Fisheries encourages the dropping of bottle papers, as do the official bureaus of Canada and Bermuda, where tabulations of their drifts are also kept.

The largest drift, McManus said, of which he personally knows, was a bottle that traveled about 12,000 miles from Cape Horn, across the South Atlantic to the South Indian Ocean and to the South Pacific and finally came to rest on the shores of Chili.

"All this sort of thing tends to educate our mariners, for we keep ready for them scientific information which we have translated into language they understand," he said.

Reports on meteors, waterspouts, earthquakes under the water and all sorts of material of this nature is compiled by the Navy. There is even a file on vital statistics, McManus said with a laugh, and explained that he meant the birth of a shoal, often the aftermath of an earthquake, which pushes up a bit of unexpected and uncharted land.

There are strange currents and winds across the seas and often they do not behave as expected for a recent one that did a great deal of damage to Southern shipping raced across the Atlantic toward the Coast of Florida, its usual course, and then instead of heading harmlessly out to sea, tied itself into a knot and doubled back into unexpected quarters with the ships unprepared for its coming.

McManus, who has sailed around the world a number of times, gone iceberg chasing with the Coast Guard and spent much of his spare time at sea, came into the Navy Department in 1889, although he had originally intended to be a doctor.

From some of his pilot charts more than 300,000 individual observations have been taken in order to have exact information. In his files he has maps showing currents and winds on all the oceans and there is even a detour map of the seas, printed for the use of sailing vessels and low-powered steamers which cannot successfully buck the strong winds and currents. For instance, the quickest sailing route to Lima, Peru, to San Francisco, takes a sailing ship on a 1,000-mile detour out to sea instead of down the short coast route where it would be in danger of being becalmed for weeks or forced backward by immense currents.

Miss Gertrude M. McNally, secretary of the National Federation of Federal Employes, leaves Washington today for Chicago, where she will be one of the principal speakers at the Illinois convention of the N. F. F. E. on Sunday.

That's quite an orchestra they have over in the Internal Revenue Department which plays under the able management of Mrs. Maude M. Anderson. She's not the conductor, but the main moving spirit for she organized the group, attends the weekly rehearsals of the 30 players and made the arrangements to supply instruments to those players who do not have their own. These came from a lot in Philadelphia purchased by Uncle Sam just after the close of the World War and held in the supply depot there. Ralph Toll is the conductor. Last night the orchestra played for the monthly meeting of the American Federation of Government Employes at the Hamilton Hotel.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces it will accept applications not later than August 10 for the following-named positions:

Student aid, Soil Conservation Service, $1,440 a year.

District refuge administrator, Bureau of Biological Survey, $3,800 a year.

Marine surveyor (formerly called assistant inspector of hulls and assistant inspector of boilers), Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, Department of Commerce, $2,900 a year.

"The Human Side of Art" is what they will talk about tomorrow in the weekly broadcast of the Smithsonian Institution and the Department of Education. They have gathered much interesting material from the National Gallery of Art, part of the Smithsonian, and the only thing approaching a national collection, supported by Government funds, which the country has.

It's going to be what amounts to almost a gossip session, we hear, for stories of the artists, how they happened to do particular pieces of work and all kinds of stories are to be told.

Recently, the gallery received a gift of 197 etchings from the Chicago Society of Etchers, which will go on public exhibition in September. Last year the same society donated 495 etchings by famous masters of many parts of the world, but with the greatest percentage by American artists.

The story of the Gallery also will be told from its beginning when Harriet Lane Johnson, niece of President James Buchanan, willed her art collection to the Nation. Since then a number of bequests of art treasures or money for their purchase have been made to the Smithsonian.

Masons Will Hear Episcopal Cleric

SELLING THE RETAILER'S $1,087 CUSTOMER

The average family spent $1,087 in one or more of the 1,500,000 U. S. retail stores last year. Take away this flow of sales through retail stores and industry would be crippled and destroyed.

Newspaper advertising enables the retailer to keep this huge volume of merchandise moving from factory to consumer.

Retailers use far more newspaper advertising than any other kind, because in excess of 8 copies of newspapers are bought and read by the average American family every week.

Consumers read newspaper advertising with eager interest because it tells them where, when, what and how to buy to satisfy their needs. Many consult no other source to guide them in their shopping decisions.
